To the Class of 1936

The graduation of any class from Yale is a melancholy event and I feel that this is particularly true of the Class of 1936. You have so built yourselves into the very heart of Yale that it will seem the poorer without you. Individually and as a class you have won a place of distinction in the annals of Yale. In the development of the College Plan, in the enrichment of the intellectual life of Yale College and in many other fields you have displayed qualities of leadership, of intellectual vigor and honesty, and of generous cooperation for which we are eternally grateful. It is my hope for you that these qualities, so conspicuously characteristic of your class, may not only bring success and happiness to you individually but may enable you to be of outstanding service to your generation.

I am more deeply appreciative of the honor you do me in placing my name in this place in your Classbook than I can express. I like to interpret this as an indication that the friendships formed in the years of rather intimate association with you are not at an end but are to be strengthened and matured in the years to come.

Ever sincerely,

PREFACE

EVEN now, as we come to the end of four years under the Mother's gentle admonishing care, we are in a state of eager expectancy: we believe that we have yet to live wholly. Larger realms than the cloistered University's await our young ambition. We go forward confident of making our place in the world.

And yet it is now, with graduation, that we begin to look back as well as ahead. What we are and what we will be are sons to what we have been, and these days we have come through together, these days of headlong meditation and exulting disappointment and soft triumph, though behind us, are part of us. We will remember them.

That we may more clearly remember them, this book exists. That it exists, it is safe to say, is thanks to the untiring selfless effort of Bernard Courtney Rankin, who ploughed his way through the incredible lethargy of undergraduates to prepare the ground for this fruit. Chester Brooks Kerr's combination of system and taste has made possible future memory of individuals as they are today; and the special talents of Kent Dorsey Wightman and Westcott Burlingame have lent the book something more than a sentimental beauty. Finally, as in years past, Miss Marion L. Phillips and her capable assistants have lent efficient machinery an unusual attribute, patience.

Class History

Freshman

THE army of 1936 moved quietly and deliberately into New Haven on the night of Tuesday, the twenty-seventh of September, nineteen hundred and thirty two, and its weapons shone by the campfires which gleamed from Lake Place to Temple Street. A subdued murmur as of a multitude on a star-lit plain served notice to Mother Yale that a new host had camped at her gates. We had come, silently and determinedly, to conquer—and with as little nonsense as possible. The next morning, eight hundred and eighty-four strong, we rode a Trojan Horse into the very Hall of Woolsey.

The spell-binding of the patriarch Percy Walden and the guile of the genial "Flash" Merritt delayed the striking of the first blow—but not for long. We returned that night, escorted by the "Y" men with torches and the junior delegation of the S.B.A., to hear the Seniors eulogize their golden calf, Extra-Curricular. And while Dud Parker, John Wilbur, Marsh Dodge, and other titans, who "stood for Yale at its finest" and knew it (and loved it), took turns in nervously gesticulating for a dying cause, we hid our yawns behind Good Humors. One lad, from Charles City, Iowa, dozed off in the balcony and fell heavily to the floor on his head. This was considered so humorous that he was immediately elected to the Record board. President Angell ran in at the end of the meeting, looked us over, and pronounced us good. He added a few words on responsibility, which left a slight lump in our throats—dispelled by a frantic rendition of Yale songs on the part of the assembled cheer leaders and beer on the part of the York A.C. But the memory of this man Angell remained with us long afterwards. Here was a man who understood us, who knew whence we had come and why. He gave us Yale and a nice new College Plan—which wasn't as magnanimous as it sounded then, for he got it from a guy named Harkness, who had found it a few years before on Chapel Street.

We were, in fact, a serious-minded class, in spite of a few kids like Alexander and Hausberg. We had ideals, we faced the facts; the firm, the steady hand upon the helm, the clear eye, the finger on every pulse—that was we in a shell-hole. A new race of heroes for the old, the common denominator of Tufts and Spitzer. And besides, we were to inherit the College Plan.

"Come right in."

Things moved swiftly that fall. The first Saturday we entrained for the Bowl to practice our new cheers as a scrappy Yale team held Bates to a 0-0 tie. Simultaneously, our Class had begun its football career by trimming Exeter—score, 13-7. The News, ever on the alert, sensed the undergraduate political awareness and threw open its columns to the customers for election controversy. Upperclassmen held forth on the inexpediency of changing spats in the middle of the leopard and Al Smith opened an Immature Golf Course on the grass which grew in the middle of Fifth Avenue (just a bull's throw from the Empire State, where Old Potatoes are two for a nickel now). The clarion was sounded when J. B. Bingham became the first of our Class to crash the News with a front-page article entitled, "To the Idealistic Voter." We read it next morning in class with glee (Glee, ex-'36, who left Yale precipitously after the Freshman Prom, but not until he had established a tatting society which still bears his name). The News sent out an extensive questionnaire to determine the undergraduate feeling on the subject of football. Our social eligibility was confirmed by a blanket invitation to us to join l'Assemblée "400" de Danse. Both Jerrys knew the first names of half of us and had nicknamed the other half "Pal."

Come Saturday came Old Man Stagg and his Chicago Loopers, who played a valiant Yale team to a 7-7 standstill. Mal Stevens told us that Yale was always a slow starter, and everybody agreed that it was a good thing to keep the scores down in the opening games of the season. Up in Andover, the Freshmen were passing and running their way to a 25-0 rout of Andover. (The News also records that Train was performing creditably at center for the second Freshmen.) Friday night we staged a terrific rally for the team, marching from the Old Campus to the new Ray Tompkins House, where Mal Stevens delivered his philippic against what he chose to call the "damnable veneer of sophistication." He further prophesied that Yale would find itself against the Army on Saturday. Sure enough, on Saturday there was Yale playing against the Army; and while Buckler and Vidal staged a series of foot races, the team found itself a nice big goose-egg, which was carefully stored in Ray Tompkins for the future. Slowly the deadening chill of reality closed its icy fingers around the heart of Yale; something had died, and Grantland Rice had written its epitaph. Football, we said, is just a game; you can't win all the time; the only people who give a darn are the alumni, and they're just a bunch of old stuffed-shirts living in the past; and anyway, football is just an excuse for giving some slugs a sweater with a "Y" on it. Next day the News came out with the results of its football poll, which proved uncontrovertibly that Yale men thought that football was a good thing. This made our position just a teensy bit ambiguous. Some consolation was afforded by the fact that 1936 had cleaned up on Roxbury the previous Saturday, 18-7.

Attention was diverted at this time by the initiation of the annual Budget drive. We gladly gave of our all, maintaining our reputation as the most socially-minded class on the campus. (We had already been pretty socially-minded with the Suit Pressing, Laundry and Student News agencies, but what the hell.) Glory came, too, as the Class pulled a surprise by cleaning up in the first Willisbrook meet—Tom Ritzman and Westy Burlingame starring in the upset.

Next Saturday Dartmouth blew into town, armed with well over a thousand gallons of green paint and letters of recommendation from all but one of the leading sports writers. We spent the morning anesthetising ourselves for the operation and then went to the Bowl in the afternoon to get the surprise of our lives as the Jinx eased over six points to Dartmouth's zero. This so disrupted the existing machinery that the News forgot to mention that good old 1936 had kept its slate clean by drubbing the Columbia frosh, 19-0.

All but irresistible.

We turned a critical, not to say wary, eye to the future at the first meeting of the Freshman Forum as R. W. Thomas and O. W. Dennis battled to no referee's decision on the subject, "Resolved: Democracy Fails in a Crisis." The referee was Chet Kerr. Meanwhile, the results of the News straw vote showed Hoover an overwhelming favorite, with Roosevelt just nosing out Thomas as the last votes came in. (Hoover, 1416; Roosevelt, 370; Thomas, 347.) The Literary Digest poll showed that Roosevelt had plenty on the ball in some sections, but we knew better.

Eye-opener.

The Varsity mercifully took a week off from their Bowl festivities, and all eyes focused on the battle between Yale's and Princeton's undefeated Freshman teams. In an afternoon of high wind, both teams played a conservative game, spending most of the time punting. Princeton's one threat seemed ended on Yale's five-yard stripe, when a substitute named Ken Willis trotted out onto the field. His field goal proved the margin of victory for the "happy coincidences," 3-0, and it broke the hearts of the Andover contingent (Captain Davis, Heinie Gardner, Dick Barr, Bill Hughes, Kim Whitehead, and Butch Schultz), as his field goal for Exeter the year before had ended Andover's hopes for a championship year.

The week's lay-off had resuscitated the Big Blue to such an extent that it journeyed to Princeton to encounter a clawless Tiger aggregation and, after considerable back-slapping on both sides, left the field with the count knotted, 7-7. In the interim the disgruntled Freshmen whaled the stuffings out of Harvard to the tune of 32-19.

Next week came Harvard and one of the heaviest downpours a loyal Yale ever sat through. Yale sold that goose-egg (see p. —) to the Bostons for nineteen slightly used markers—a pretty deal. Joy knew no bounds—

the Record gave ($2.50) a dance in honor of the fact that you just can't have the Freshmen wandering about in the streets, and eight or nine of us went. It was bully.

ing sound, Reading Period set in (for the upper classes), and the population dropped about seventy per cent. As we wandered about in the cold drizzle of an early New Haven winter and thought of the privileged in Bermuda we developed a class consciousness that has been cited as the root of the 1936 News Board's socialistic attitude.

Sought a mission.

Calcium Night was a bit confusing. After the show was over, two residents of the Old Campus found some flares that had a little wham left and chased each other all over the lot inflicting minor burns and bruises. This was laid at the door of the bewildered fraternities and marked the beginning of the end.

Next week, with a mild rush-ventured from the shade of the leafless elms got off with a little light rubber-hose treatment. A statue of snow was erected on the Old Campus which has been erroneously attributed to the Art School students; actually, it was intended to be an impressionistic representation of "the Wop" Deasy, holding, with characteristic modesty, an image of his mother's son.

Sensing the filthy finger of graft, 1936 rallied the weight of public opinion behind an investigation of the Commons food problem. The University allowed us to poke around and then published a long report in the News proving that the Dining Hall was actually losing money. The findings of Bud Fairman's committee seemed to dispute this, and matters remained at loggerheads for a few days until the Authorities suggested a compromise of a larger glass of milk for a cessation of the investigation. This was accepted, and the Class found that it had been sold down the river for a mess of pottage.

The Freshman Glee Club, ably assisted by the Varsity and Lanny Ross, sang for two hours in the court of Pierson College before the Paramount News Reel—before the Paramount News Reel decided that the shot wouldn't be worth releasing. At any rate, it

Churned.

The winter term we found relatively drab. The Schubert Theatre tried a burlesque revival with success that might be described as Pyrrhic. Six red beards in a front box received most of the frantic police attention in the near-riot that ensued, while those members of our Class who had was never seen in the local emporiums.

Meanwhile, the Class was taking the Gym by storm. Wid Cates led a small but enthusiastic squad through an undefeated boxing season; Bob Graham headed the wrestlers in a similar feat; Dick Cummins' basketball team rallied to end the season by defeating both Harvard and Princeton; the swimming team was only defeated once (by Far Rockaway), with Captain Penn consistently starring in the sprints; and the fencing team was headed only by Princeton. Down at the Arena, Jim Mills' boys made a good account of themselves until the Princeton and Harvard games.

By an overwhelming vote, we decided to have a Prom. Hersey, Davis, Fairman, Goodall (remember?), Bernie Rankin, Taylor, Royal, and Upton made up the committee. Casa Loma, the Lawn Club, and March 17. The Prom will ever be remembered as one of the major rat-hunts in our undergraduate careers. The Taft was the scene of several small riots, with Butch Schultz figuring prominently in each (he woke up some time later and wandered over to Vanderbilt, where he collected articles of dress wear from room to room as he went). Other and similar parties kept the Class separated until the Grand March at eleven o'clock. From then till four and five and six (some say even seven) hoarse but willing girls hauled their flagging escorts about the campus. Classes that morning were a shambles what with bodies in full dress falling heavily to the floor from time to time and sweet young things harmonizing with their dates in the back of the room to the newly-learned Casa Loma Stomp. Mae West in "She Done Him Wrong" and "Forty-Second Street" completed the collapse of our morale, and Easter vacation came just in time to save us from idiocy.

With the light heart and the misty eye, with the head in the clouds and the mind absorbed with the mental image of the dream girl, we greeted spring. The Whiffenpoofs sang softly of true love and collected enough pennies from beneath our windows to endow Mory's for another five years. kin, Walker twirled effectively, and Captain Curtin, Mack, and Whitehead slugged; some took to the cinders, where Ritzman broad-jumped proficiently in the form that won him a place on the Yale-Harvard team which went to England in 1935; some went out to Gales Ferry to paddle to the rhythmic cadences of Joe Holmes' flute-like voice; all of us went to Savin Rock and nobody worked. A candidate to one of the Hillhouse sororities clad in a pale pink corset raced Fate across the Old Campus and reached Phelps just in time to escape the clutches of the startled but alert residents. The Campus Cops explained to her all about the bees and the flowers and sent her home in a blanket. The Lawn Club threw a Shipwreck Ball that considerably decimated the population due to the untimely arrival of the local gendarmes; after about a week the survivors began to return, bloody but unbowed. Red Moore caused a national fluster in Campus Cop circles by a series of bogus tele-

Freshmen—McKnight, Moore, Hausberg, and Alexander—who arranged with the proprietor of Harry's Grill to get free beer by sitting in the front of the store and looking as though they were enjoying it.

The Oval, rest its stones! was the scene of much that has made our Class immortal and has made our memories of our first year so rich. We were the last to hallow those old walls with the poignant cry of the sex-crazed onga-onga for its mate—"Fiiiiiiyer!"—the last to paint the clock, the last to strew those six forlorn trees with rolls of paper. a sign outside his door saying, "5¢ to see Blank"? The Oval was the center of the Freshman Class, and its passing has been accompanied by much of the old spirit. That will surely crop up again in another place, for it is so much a part of Yale that locality cannot confine it; but our Class will always remember it and return to point out affectionately that it stood where Berkeley College now stands—and parts like the Red Sea to leave a straight path to the Promised Land.

From the vantage point of Senior year, it is hard to refrain from sentimentality in reviewing those early days. The memory is hazy now, and the outline is blurred, but the year emerges as the transition from youth to manhood. We couldn't feel the change then, but when we returned next fall, we knew that we were no longer Freshmen. We settled down in earnest to do things, to separate ourselves into groups, to make teams; in a thousand and one ways to assert ourselves. But as Freshmen we made the truest friendships and had the most fun, we faced the world with a naïve enthusiasm that we could never quite recapture.

EDWIN J. CLAPP, JR.

Buried Caesar.

Sophomore

OUR Sophomore year began on the Milk Train—that famous institution which lands one in New Haven bright as any daisy just in time for that first Monday morning class. At this class we determined several things: first, that it was still physically impossible to be attentive to professorial dicta having arrived in New Haven at seven o'clock, without having had any sleep the night before. Secondly we learned that over eight hundred and fifty Freshmen made only about seven hundred Sophomores. Last, but not least, we found that we were no longer new men—no longer “dumb” Freshmen. We were here for that somewhat indefinite purpose of showing the “Light” to that inferior Class of '37.

As hazy as is the usual Sophomore concerning his exact status in a university, the Sophomore at Yale in 1933 had at least one definite straw at which to grab. There was a College Plan. There was a College Plan because President Angell said so. The News brought forth in glaring headlines, “The Yale College Plan will be launched officially today.” President Angell added that, “its success, like that of the NRA, depends primarily on the whole-hearted coöperation of those directly affected by it.” Another good illustration that things educational are more enduring than things political! To accommodate the President 100 per cent, one Fellow of Davenport College declined a week-end invitation in the following manner, “Alas! dear boy, I could never do that! For so long as I live, I am constrained by my own hand to sit at board in Davenport for all of my twenty-one meals each week!”

Notwithstanding this remarkable coöperation on the part of the faculty, we of more youthful mind and of far less experience in matters temporal asked ourselves whether this revolutionary system was here to stay? The McClellan contingent, under the able leadership of Doug Hickok and Frick Byers, was not at all too certain as to the

President Welcomes All Students to University

By President James Rowland Angell

With the opening of the residential colleges this week, Yale enters upon a new deal. Its success, like that of the NRA, depends primarily on the whole-hearted coöperation of those directly affected by it. It is aimed at the welfare of the entire undergraduate body, and with reasonable support, it should revolutionize for the better the whole structure of student life.

At the beginning there will inevitably be inconveniences and sources of friction, but patience, good temper and good will can be counted upon to straighten out any serious difficulties. The place cannot be 100% perfect at the outset but it is plastic and can be constantly improved.

In availing myself of the courtesy of the NEWS to welcome most heartily our returning students and our new recruits, I beg leave to stress the deeply menacing conditions of our national life and to urge all members of the Yale family to bear vividly in mind the heavy responsibility which rests upon us in a time of crisis to assure the fidelity of the University to its peculiar intellectual and spiritual obligations.

Only the beginning.

found to be physically impossible to accomplish this and at the same time leave untouched the numbers on the said doors. This led to very nice but ineffective guesswork as to which door should be replaced where. Eventually the absorbing problem was solved by removing all the locks and putting new ones in their places. More power to the Yale Lock Company, but it is to be doubted whether virtues of that anomalous melting-pot called Vanderbilt College. No one could be absolutely certain whether the recalcitrants would not rather have been incorporated in a permanent unit of the new system had that august allotment committee so decreed. When one heard of the immortal Door Legend of Branford, one began to wonder. To give this College Plan of ours a more ancient and cloistered appearance, it was ordered that all Branford doors should be removed and stained a darker and mustier hue. Now, it was new locks will give any door an older appearance!

Anyway, those left stranded on the Old Campus looked upon their fate in the most light-hearted manner, and, not being restrained in any way by the high educational and moral standards of this noble College Plan, they took advantage of, and saw many times over, certain moving pictures of very private circulation that put in their appearance very shortly after our return to college. Little Eva had come to us again—this time through the medium of the screen!

"Morning, my boy."

The time had now arrived when we were to assume our more important and serious duties. "Light" had to be dealt out to the Freshmen. As social matters are always dominant in the mind of the undergraduate, it was decided to inaugurate a series of Freshman Tea Dances. We managed to mingle most democratically with our inferior underclassmen, while a bevy of New Haven's most flashy débutantes distributed both tea and dances in a most gracious manner. The Freshmen went away with most sober enlightenment.

Reg Root had a covetous eye on that triumvirate—Whitehead,

Roscoe, and Curtin—and was just beginning to make serious progress with them when Calling Week turned up exceptionally early. We recall with mixed feelings the machinations and packings of the period. Alpha Delt was supposed to be on its last legs, but then there wasn't anybody who stayed on his legs for very much of the time. Aboriginal outbreaks took place with a distressing degree of regularity, resulting in a considerable amount of material damage. Window panes were shattered and an occasional door panel ill-used. The Dramat windows presented their inevitable attraction—that of invariably being within reach no matter in what position one found oneself. A “smoker” at the Yale Record office momentarily faced postponement owing to the sudden appearance of an errant squaw. The damage, however, was for the most part sustained by the savage himself. This aspiring Mohican had placed his foot under the wheel of a horse-drawn truck, thus proving it was still perfectly possible to be run down by a horse-and-buggy.

A classmate of forgetful tendencies allowed himself to become insensate at a tea in Philadelphia, and had it not been for a quick-witted friend of the same desirable affiliation who poured our classmate into a plane for New Haven, he might never have delivered carnations to his upperclass relatives. Thus Calling Week culminated in the fracas of Calcium Night with bus loads of young bloods journeying to the Rainbow or the York A.C. with questionable designs on the virtue of New Haven's élite—nay, that of all Connecticut.

As Sophomores, we were not privileged to witness one of those invincible Yale football machines. The early season encounters with Maine and Washington and Lee were anything but spectacular from the Yale point of view. After Brown had been defeated by the smallest of margins, a lamentable fact became exceedingly well known. Green paint was found hidden in the most curious places, as an overconfident Hanover tribe prepared to invade the Bowl. The jinx held—the paint remained canned, and so did the Indians, we are told, for a long period thereafter. One green Indian had considerable trouble finding that social and drinking center of our campus—the Chi Psi House. Inquiry was made at the house of Dr. Bayne-Jones in a most unusual manner. The green-man had contrived to drive his nondescript vehicle through the narrowest of narrow gates—meant only for pedestrians—right onto the very door-mat of the aforementioned medico. Our eccentric visitor returned to the Northlands minus much paint and all four fenders!

Reading Period Folly.

Then came the Army game—that terror for all the girls. An invitation to this encounter invariably means second or third choice, and the also-ran instinct in the female is still in the embryonic stage and is far from being developed or encouraged. We were disappointed in the 21-0 shellacking, but that Roscoe-to-Curtin combination gave us many a breath-taking and highly satisfactory thrill. We vaguely remember the Dean mentioning something about better behavior on trolley cars—this amid the timely appearance of the Army Mule that bore a good deal of the afternoon's burden on its rear shoulders, and the delicious debauchery from en-

the Howard Twins were invited to play en route, but declined. We were hopeful that Dan might have been disciplined to hasten forth at the end of the game and adorn the Harvard goal posts in a manner all his own. Such a move was not expedient, however, when we remember that fascinating scoreboard that flashed forth intriguingly but incomprehensibly those amazing numbers that read something like Harvard, 19—Yale, 6. The Sophomore triumvirate again came off with try to entry . . . from floor to floor—the irony of it all!

It must not be forgotten that at this point appeared the Yale mascot that was later to be immortalized through the activities of the Record and the Lampoon. Many suppositions were rampant about Handsome Dan the second. It was common belief that Henry Gold had knitted him a sweater; a moving van had been chartered for his trip to the Yale-Harvard game equipped with sofas, a revolving bar, and a white-jacketed Negro servant; Merrill Knapp was to have led a quartet for his entertainment, while the laurels, but not the score. Another grid classic had passed into history. Fortunately, a second one also passed into history the next Saturday. Little as possible should be said about that contest, but one will long remember this Yale-Princeton game if for no other reason than when tilting back the head for those last few drops, a large sign appeared high in the blue—"Send your son to Harvard" trailed by an autogyro.

With our pigskins tucked comfortably away in Cambridge and Princeton, and after Frick Byers had been placed in direct line for the football managership, we turned our minds with a good deal of relief to hockey and basketball. Mills and Cooke were consistently demolishing the net behind their opponent's goal, while the basketball men were well on their way towards their major "Y's." We had been very wary about presenting ourselves at the Gym while the memory of correct-posture classes was still very fresh in our minds. With time, our fear had become less hysterical, and now—a full year after the last of the "sweat-box" classes—we presented ourselves at this emporium of sport with a good deal of joy and anticipation. After all, we had to get the lay of the land before the mermaids came down from Northampton for the swimming carnival.

Unfortunately, we could not long ponder over these pleasing events that the winter term held in store for us. A reading period was at hand—the first one of those intellectual gems scattered here and there over our college careers. Soon trains, planes, and the hopefully-persuasive thumb were dispersing us far and wide to the lands of gin and bitters, where our thoughts of hockey ceded to aquaplaning, and those of the basketball floor to the dance hall, and where one could just as well do all the required reading in far pleasanter surroundings. Or could one?

resolved not to take a step in that damp, mirky mist unless Ginger Rogers or Mae West came to town.

Two major events roused us from our stupor. A blizzard—second only to that of '88—hit New Haven just about the time we had accumulated our first post-Christmas excess energy. We all hoped that the snowfall had been too great for the faculty to overcome, and in many cases our hopes were not in vain. Woodstock was not the fashion in those days, so we amused ourselves with amateur photography, while the watchmen at Berkeley Oval had the impossible task of keeping us off the scaffolding of the new building.

A little later in the year, Mac Farmer, after much bluffing, finally laid down his football poker hand. On the cards were Ducky Pond, Greasy Neale, and others—a new full house, no less—while Reg Root was left holding the deck, so to speak. Other activities had taken place in the Ray Tomp-

ly just as well, for it takes the average man about to the time of the Junior Prom to get back to normal after three weeks of reading period festivity combined with Christmas and New Year's Eve. Mr. Rogers Runs Across A Scout for Old Eli

To the Editor of The New York Times:

HOLLYWOOD, Calif., April 5.
—Out to the studio here where we are working night and day on a picture come Dr. Professor Angell of Yale. I had always thought that a fellow from Santa Barbara named Harkness was the angel of Yale.

This was an awful nice fellow, and a very pleasant charming wife. He wanted me to help him on a couple of things. Wants to get Yale made a CCC camp and have education put on the basic industry list. He is looking for five men for the line and three back-field men. He is on his way to Honolulu where he has heard of a quarterback.

Yale is doing all she can to get back among the 400 of football teams. He is doing all he can to get Yale graduates to take up some other work than "brain-trusting." He thinks it's a business that won't last.

Yours,
WILL ROGERS.

kins building. Lex Thompson had won against the field in the hockey managerial contest, while Babcock, Wells, Pond, Humphrey, and others were the chosen few to guide future teams.

Strong arm methods.

Not nearly so much log-rolling was displayed during the winter rush period. A group of the more adventurous candidates succeeded in getting a large calf into the back yard of Sigma Phi. After the local firemen had been called to extricate the wretched animal, a complaint was lodged against the rough language used. It appears that the vocabulary of the Valentine children was being expanded with a little too much acceleration! Our exercise of the period was strictly limited to an odd squash game or two in the bowels of our own College. It was still far too inclement for us to trust ourselves to the elements, but rumors did get back to us from other parts of the University. Over in McClellan, rabbit farming had been taken up in grand style by McCartney, thereby rendering that cloistered atmosphere increasingly fertile.

About this time Bermuda punch-boards reached the height of their success. Not waiting for the lucky number to be drawn, hundreds of hopefuls were perusing the Furness Line sailing schedules. The Rugby team was organizing a system whereby the efficient and continuous drinking of Planter's Punches became a recognized Yale sport. The only thing that interrupted these pleasant meditations was the advent of the so-called Junior Prom, at which the Sophomore Class was represented to a man, and we are told that even many more Freshmen appeared than were strictly necessary. Saturday's classes were strangely refreshed with powder and perfume, especially Dr. Haggard's course on Applied Physiology.

Hub of the whirl.

Concentrated ease.

Another reading period was now on our hands—they were coming with such regularity that we scarcely knew what to do with them. Before most of us wended our way southward, we paused to watch Gilligan and Mills walk off with all the hockey laurels when we finally beat Harvard in the play-off game. With reassuring thoughts that we had avenged our football catastrophies, we started for lands unknown below the Mason-Dixon line with most of the Library's books stored inconspicuously in the bottom of our suitcases—there to cause far more trouble to the red-caps than to any one else.

* * * * *

Returning to the old harness at the beginning of April for the spring sojourn, we discovered ten inches or more of snow piled up around our front doors. Unable to dig ourselves in, we returned forthwith to the more temperate climes of New York night-life, resolved to effect a college entrance at some later date. After the Rugby team had returned more or less safely from Bermuda, and the Glee Club had been rescued from the clutches of Southern hospitality, we returned once more to normal pursuits. Those unfortunates who could not get to the English island got their one and only taste of a Rugby game, when the Cambridge Cantabs from the mother country arrived in the Bowl and meted out a most terrible walloping to our aggregation.

Several swim.

That modern human adaptation of the squirrel cage—the Payne

Whitney rowing tank—was now deserted for a game of hide-and-seek among the Housatonic icebergs. No one had as yet molested the high-tension wires near Derby with an aeroplane, but it took no aerial observation to determine that eventually McCartney, Holmes, Castle, Belknap, and others would make the Varsity shell—the first two made it that very same year. Little mention can be made of either track or baseball. Sophomore year, few of our classmates had risen to unprecedented heights in either of these fields of aggrandizement. Curtin and Walker were cutting away on the diamond in a rather grand style, while Ritzman was the only one to be actually burning up the cinders. Bartholomew, Northrup, and Scribner were chosen to run their respective teams. We trust that in the good old days of '34, managerial politics had not descended to the dark depths that we are witnessing in this enlightened age!

Our water on the knee—resulting mainly, we are told, from the New Haven weather—might have developed into something serious had it not been for the counteracting effect of liquor on the brain acquired at that ever memorable episode—Derby Day. It pains us exceedingly to have to recall this strenuous event though it does come vaguely back to us through the painful reminder of the many headaches that ensued during most of the following week. Through the prevalent haze of the time, we perceived the future crew manager returning from Northampton just in time to see the Varsity pull up to the float after the race. Two eccentrics thought they were in Ataturk's land with the Hellespont before them. The first of this adventurous pair got no further than his dive took him—the other had luck and the wind behind him; he grounded on the opposite shore. The sports did such a job of Derby Day that the administration promptly discontinued it—a great pity, for the more original of our Class found in this holiday a most appropriate setting for their wildest whims.

Mint-juleps and Madison became the vogue, separately or together. As the blizzard hit us at Prom time, so did the heat wave prostrate us during our examinations. Then one day, for the first time, we became conscious of elm trees in New Haven. At the stroke of five under the elm in Branford Court, we witnessed the first of those amazing performances called Tap Day. As Sophomores we sat around clapping and joking; as Juniors—only a little later—we would be standing self-consciously hoping and wondering.

turned Junior in due course, and another era was run. Those who struggled to the boat races at New London witnessed the first Roosevelt defeat—in the Harvard Freshman crew. We witnessed, too, the rather sorry sight of Rev Wadsworth racing up the ties after the boat train had pulled out of the station. That year we were neither boy nor man, but that rather indefinite status was enjoyed by some of us to such an extent that we came back to try it over again.

PROLOGUE.

Well, we came back. We came in every conceivable way. We came from every conceivable direction. Mountains, prairies, rivers, lakes, oceans, sands . . . ships, cars, trains, planes . . . cities, towns, villages, Long Island . . . they all spewed us forth. The gougers that run the taxis in New Haven . . . the Student Baggage Transfer . . . the guy who sat next to us in Econ

10 whose name we can't remember . . .

Jerry, Fi' Buck, Rosey, Cornelius, the tailors whom we still owed for spring suits . . . they were all there to receive us.

Boy, it'd been a nifty summer and boy, we'd been practically everywhere, and boy, we'd met some nifty girls. Well, back to the old grind again, yessir. Boy, I'll never get this stuff unpacked . . . got a hammer?

Then we assembled in Sprague Hall under the benign eye of Professor Buck. He smiled down on us, wise-cracked, and gave us his blessing and a goodly number of eleven o'clock Saturday classes. And so we began the business of being Juniors.

Books, furniture, pictures somehow became arranged in their proper places, and immediately began their annual accumulation of dust. Things got under way. We discouraged solicitors with the know-all-the-answers mien of third-year men. We picked up our free News copies from in front of Yale Station. We said to the janitor, yes, Fred, if we buy any wood this year, we'll get it from you. We quickly regained our old knack of nimbly tying up traffic on Elm and York streets with our jay-walking.

On the site of the old Oval, where all that riveting had been going on Sophomore year, we saw a shiny new member of the College Plan. This pile of Rogers Gothic was a rectangle pulled apart in the middle to permit a view of the front of the Library from College Street. On its Elm Street end a golden mitre swung in the breeze, testimony to the fact that the Powers, when choosing a name for the new unit, had rung in the good Bishop Berkeley. Other than that, the topography of the Elm City looked rather much the same. The College Toasty had put in a bar and now served cocktails, but nothing else along the York Street front had been altered.

Things still cost just as much at the Co-op.

A new class, with the incredibly high number of '38, was wandering around the streets, but they were pretty far removed from the ken of 1936. Tinker, Williams, Spykman, Haggard, Adams, Gabriel dusted off their lecture notes, and we were off.

FALL.

It was the second year of the College Plan, the second year of the New Deal, and the first year of the New Coaching Staff. All of which meant that we said, "Look, that blonde waitress isn't here this year," "Gee, Dad certainly doesn't think much of that guy Roosevelt any more," and then turned our thoughts to football.

This was the year of the Suicide Schedule, so football stepped briskly into the lime-light and stayed there pretty much the entire fall. We had been reading for several days in the Times, the Tribune, and the Cleveland Plain Dealer how Train, Whitehead, Barr, Tommy Curtin, Rankin, Roscoe, Davis, and the others had been running their lit-

the legs off under the hot sun at New London. This Gales Ferry racket, together with the importation of a red-nosed man called the Major, had been thought up in an effort to cope with the fact that

The Second Year.

Columbia had replaced Bates as the opener. The Pond-Neale-Meyer-Williamson outfit was doing its best to erase the "we-play-football-at-Yale-for-the-fun-of-the-game" blot from the Eli escutcheon. Mac Farmer's alumni puffed on cigars and waited to see what would happen. We sat around and talked about going out to watch practice and waited, too.

While we waited, several other things happened. The Hoot and the Disarmament Conference were pronounced officially dead. President Angell and the activities men put the Freshmen through their Woolsey Hall paces. The seeds of the Great Fraternity Uproar were sown as Chairman Spitzer took a preliminary crack at Calling Week. Mae West came to town in the "Belle of the Nineties" and for the benefit of those who somehow missed her the first week, a wise management held the film over. The "Dear Barry" London Letters began to appear in the News.

We finally got off the last of our summer visit bread-and-butter letters and began to wish to hell we hadn't asked Edna up for the Harvard game. A few of us found out that those windy tennis courts out by the Bowl hadn't improved a bit. The fall rains set in.

Then things really began popping. First the long-awaited-for football season got under way. Lou Little's Lions arrived and demonstrated that they'd probably been practicing since August 1. Whatever the reason was, their early season football was a shade better than ours, and a fighting Yale team went down, 12-6. We didn't mind, though, because it was Columbia and not Bates or Maine. The defeat became even more respectable later in the year when this same Columbia outfit went on to the Rose Bowl and won the mythical national championship. In the same breath as this football opener, all hell broke loose over in fraternity row. Calling Week got under way, the News opened fire, and the Great Fraternity Uproar began to swell in volume. Sid Sweet and his A.D. cohorts wisely got out from under. Jerry Roscoe and the White Machine dropped their Greek title. The Alpha Chi Rhos said they weren't going to elect until the fuss died down. Spitzer's editorials earned him a derogatory serenade from indignant fraternity men. The Lit made a bid for publicity with a black-bordered number mourning for the "dead fraternities." A scathing and anonymous pamphlet appeared and spoke harshly to those behind the Old Lady in Brown. Bob Graham's Interfraternity Council had some pretty late nights trying to untangle the mess. President Angell comforted the lads by coming out and saying the fraternities are a Good Thing.

And when the smoke had cleared away, it turned out that the Sophomores hadn't paid much attention to the noise. They'd been packing like mad all the time, even as their fathers before them, and had all gone ahead and joined up anyhow. Calcium Night, quests, the scurvy Rainbow Inn—it all went according to custom.

The Uproar subsided in an almost indecently rapid fashion. Fraternity finances became back issues. Inside of a month we all began to get pretty fed up with having to answer the queries of alumni, parents, and outside friends: "No, dad, the fraternities at Yale have not all folded." "No, Uncle Edgar, it hasn't collapsed, it's just become the Fence Club." "No, Mr. Twiddle, the College Plan has not raised hob with the fraternities." Ad nauseam.

The football season progressed into its middle stages. The Penn game victory was at the price of Dick Barr's second out-for-the-season leg injury in two years. The following week Jerry Roscoe set the stage for his passing reputation with a flock of well-aimed tosses that snowed Brown under, 37-0. Things began to look good for Yale's chances against Army, but then it went and happened again. Little Butcher Schultz and Bernie Rankin ran hard, and the Elis scored twice, but for the third straight year we of the Class of 1936 sat in the Bowl and saw a Cadet outfit score three times. We tried to take the taste out of our mouths with mid-season dances at some of the fraternities and clubs and even a College or two.

Gave the Lie to the LIT.

Red Moore, Frick Byers, Henry McKnight, John Sturges, and some of the boys put their heads together and the Haunt Breakfast was born . . . a Sunday-after-the-game picnic in the woods . . . mixed company, "toast and coffins," etc.

We all shelled out to the Budget Drive collectors—that is to say, we signed up for an extra jolt to father's February pocketbook. Rachmaninoff opened the Woolsey Hall concert series with what critic Hersey labeled a "grand show." Barthou and Alexander were assassinated, but Professor Spykman said it was all right, it wasn't going to lead to war this time. We stood up and applauded for the first time in a movie house as Grace Moore sang her glorious way through "One Night of Love." We got right out in the aisles as the Astaire-Rogers combination glided through the cinema version of the "Gay Divorcée." Zeta held a Halloween Beer Party that left a score of aching skulls in its trail. Gardner Carpenter wrote up his Nazi Labor Camp experiences for the News.

Then the wildmen from Dartmouth poured down out of the hills. As usual, "this was the year." And as usual, it nearly was—but not quite. Rankin did some more pretty running, Whitehead contributed what sports writers like to call a stellar game, the luck of the gods protected Yale when a couple of loose punts bounced crazily around near the Eli goal line, and the Green men were forced to retire to their hills, mumbling and muttering, on the short end of a 7-2 score. Although we didn't know it, we had just witnessed the last appearance of the Jinx. The Gentlemen from Georgia next proved themselves a thoroughly unsentimental lot by proceeding to add an embarrassing chapter to Yale's football history: they made it five in a row with another win, 14-7 this time. Czar

Train was the afternoon's bright spot. He took the opportunity of impressing some of his former schoolmates, who were wearing Georgia moleskins, and played one of the best games of his career. Time and again the droopy-legged one was to be found running around in the Crackers' backfield, just to show his erstwhile colleagues that the Northern climate had not cooled his Southern impetuosity. No one, however, was really sorry that it was Georgia's last appearance on the Yale schedule.

Meanwhile, some of us were finding smaller orbits of glory on the intercollege gridirons. Trumbull's aggregation, with their outstanding lineman, next-year's captain McBurney, bleeding profusely at the mouth, lost a hard-fought play-off with Vanderbilt, and the latter became the intercollege champions. A few election announcements began to crop up here and there. Charlie Chandler; Hugh Chisholm, Ted Woolsey, and Walt Rostow joined Jim Mills, Dwight Robinson, Jack Bingham, and Augie Heckscher in the chosen ranks of tea-drinking worshipers of England's Elizabeth. One

Imported Talent.

Yale group ventured outside these cloistered walls to display its talents and immediately ran afoul of the ugly, ugly world: the Band had to cancel its scheduled appearance at Loew's Theatre in New York because of union interference.

The football season now headed for its climax. With a record of three wins, three defeats, the Clare Curtin machine prepared for the Princeton game. We liked their spirit, but darn few of us dared to hope. Crisler's assorted collection of ex-prep school captains and miners had run roughshod over all opposition and were headed towards their second undefeated season. When November 17 dawned, Yale was on the short end of odds ranging from 3-1 to 10-1. And when the sun set over Palmer Stadium down there in New Jersey that same night, the memory of the spectacle which the 52,000 had witnessed was one which was to prove a headache to Princeton men for years and years to come.

Few of us who sat in the Yale section will forget that day. At first it didn't seem possible. Then we began to take heart. Then Kelley did his act. And finally we realized that it really was going to happen, that nothing on earth could stop those eleven Blue players from doing what they had set out to do. And so the famous Iron Men came into existence. There were three Juniors among them: Kim Whitehead rose to All-American heights that day; Chooch Train's end play was invincible; and Jerry Roscoe threw The Pass. The strain was too much for those of us who had watched and the final gun was the signal for the Yale hordes to pour down on the field and take the place apart bit by bit. Festivities were later carried on in a less barbarous, if just as hilarious, fashion up and down the avenue of Princeton clubs. A few managed to get back to New York's Twenty-One for appropriate celebration ceremonies.

Aroused, the Pondmen went on to end their season in a blaze of glory by taking Harvard in their stride in the Bowl the following week. Jerry Roscoe threw two more of his famous passes, and the game Harvards went down, 14-0. Chooch Train, Tommy Curtin, Kim Whitehead, Bernie Rankin, Webber Davis, Johnnie Hersey, and Butch Schultz all played. We bared our heads and sang "Bright College Years" as the massed panorama of color moved slowly out of the Bowl. On the way back to innumerable cocktail parties, a goodly number of inebriates toppled off the streetcar tops. The always-on-the-ball News put out an extra full-account-of-the-game edition which was on the streets twenty minutes after the referee had handed the ball to Clare Curtin. Those who thumbed through their game programs on the way home found President Angell had written therein an article re-affirming Yale's stand that "football is a recreation, not an occupation"—and with the Princeton and Harvard scalps hanging from the Yale belt, the alumni sat back this time and agreed heartily.

This final game was, as usual, the signal for one of Yale's Big Week-ends—complete with all the garnishings. Matters scholastic slid into the background—matters social took over. The checked vest and the double-vent sports coat were brushed off. The smoke shops doubled their stock of cracked ice. There was entertainment available on all sides. The Glee Club sang. Dillon Ripley, the Alsop brothers (of steppes fame), Hugh Chisholm, and Dick Rossbach all trod the boards satisfactorily in the Dramat's production of "Around the World in Eighty Days." The orchestras at the Sheff club and Ac fraternity dances on Friday and Saturday nights were playing a brand-new catchy Cole Porter tune called "You're the Top."

The week-end finally came to an end. We tapered off with a movie or two—W. C. Fields and Greta Garbo were in town—and then took the Thanksgiving week-end off. Kim Whitehead was chosen to lead the football team. Frick Byers succeeded to the managership. Champagne was served at the football banquet. Brad Smith was picked to captain the 150-lb. footballers, and Pete Pond to lead the soccer team. The hockey team got out its sticks and began to scratch up the Arena's ice. Elmer Ripley's protégés knocked the dust off the backboards up at the Gym.

We all got back from the Thanksgiving week-end to find only one more week of classes before the Reading Period, so there wasn't much use in doing much work, so we might as well taper off with another movie or two . . . "Hey, I hear those two new musical comedy flicks are pretty good." . . . "O.K., let's go to the early one so that we can get back and get some studying done."

One or two more things happened before Christmas closed in on us. The Sheff clubs began their little rushing activities, completely free, of course, from all the nasty politics that mark Ac fraternity maneuvers. "We do things quietly and in a dignified way," intoned one derby-hatted Sheff luminary. "Yeah," an Ac wit was heard to reply, "things are so quiet over in Sheff that you can hear St. A—y drop a Sophomore."

With a blare of trumpets and amid the fanfare of an organization dinner, the birth of the Yale Political Union was announced. President Angell said it was a Good Thing; Professors Spykman, Adams, and Griswold echoed him. We waited for the official opening in January to find out what it was all about. The first batch of Φ BK keys was handed out. The Junior wearers of these highly desirable watch-chain evidences of scholastic endeavor included the Messrs. Bingham, Birge, Cobb, Danowski, Darling, Dennis, Nichols, Rankin, Rosenbaum, Silverman, and Swift.

The annual Treasurer's Report came out, but as usual nobody could make head nor tail of it, and nearly everybody had left for the Reading Period anyway. Being Juniors, this Reading Period was sweeter than ever: we only had one subject in which to read this year. Two futile days spent trying to persuade the attendants at the main desk in the Library to part with the books we needed were enough to discourage most of us, and we retired to New York, Aiken, Palm Beach, and Scranton, Pa. Those that stayed around for a week or so heard the incomparable Lily Pons on the stage of Woolsey Hall ("she sang! she sang!" cried critic Hersey) and watched the amazing anatomical movements of our own Ina Ray Hutton on the stage of the Paramount. Wid Cates was awarded the coveted Norman Hall Scholarship. Professor Phelps offered his list of recommended plays to see in New York during the holiday.

Finally, the last few of us, avoiding the meaning glances of the maid and the janitor, slipped quietly out of New Haven and its muddy streets and headed for home, wondering what the heck to buy Grace for Christmas.

WINTER.

An important headline greeted our vacation-beared eyes when we returned to Mother Yale's sheltering arms at the beginning of A.D. 1935. It was vale to Alan Valentine, who was off to Rochester's presidency and fresh fields to conquer, and ave to Professor Arnold Wolfers, who was to take over Pierson College's mastership.

With the conversation still revolving pretty much around what happened to so-and-so on New Year's Eve . . . boy, was that some night . . . we settled down to what is laughingly known as winter in New Haven. Which is to say we clapped on the old mufflers and rubbers, turned our coat collars up, and waded through fog and sleet and slush. Jimmy Mills, Bob Cooke, Blake Shepherd, and the rest crossed sticks with McGill, Toronto, and St. Nick's, and the hockey season got under way. Bob Kiphuth was announced as "having his eye anxiously" on this and that swimming meet, but he couldn't get any of us really excited. Norris Hoyt, Judson, and the other natators went on winning meet after meet in monotonous fashion, running the consecutive victory string up through the 130's and annexing the eleventh straight Intercollegiate plaque. Kiphuth finally had to import a bevy of Smith College swimming beauties and organize a Carnival before he could fill any seats past the amphitheatre's third rows. The less said about basketball the better.

Winter Blanket.

Work progressed on the new College, to be named Timothy Dwight and to be headed by a Colorado importation, James Grafton Rogers; the Outing Club ran a week-end trip down to watch the construction. Trumbull's Dr. Bayne-Jones added the deanship of the Medical School to his duties. Senator Nye started after the munition makers' scalps. La Argentina turned up at the Shubert. The Child Wonder of the Age, Shirley Temple, continued to attract the cinema addicts, in spite of another nauseating vehicle.

Queen.*

Seniors began to get tired of the whole thing and the Juniors began to take over the various undergraduate activities. The News was the first to fall prey to us. Jack Bingham put his feet on the chairman's desk over in the Briton Hadden building and editorially bid "an emphatic farewell to political conservatism." Red Moore rolled up his sleeves and, assisted by Henry Barkhausen and Joe Standart, began "making it a real newspaper." A. H. II wrote the first of the famous "Bread and Circuses" columns, and Carroll Cavanaugh's wit took shape as "The Windmill." The sporting trio of Case, Cooke, and Walker undertook to supply athletic comment. The New News shoved off—and promptly brought the alumni swarming about its ears by advocating courses at Yale in Fascism and Communism.

Brendan Gill, aided by Robinson, Rogers, deMare, and Bunker as thinkers, and McBride, Berliss, Marks, Harris, and Tennent as doers, took over the Old Lady in Brown and undertook to be her guide in the all-important Centennial Year. Bill Hausberg, Corky Hamill, Fred Greene, et al., assumed command over in the Record building.

The Glee Club went social and gave a concert-brawl at the Waldorf with débutantes and everything. Ski-ing swept the East—ski caps, snow-trains, telemarks, the Co-op's borax slide. A blizzard tied up things. Slight, mellow-voiced Augie Heckscher took the TenEyck speaking prize away from Bingham, Raymond, Rogers, and Rostow. Lucienne Boyer and bald little Balieff drew us to the Shubert. The Macon crashed.

Amidst a shower of telegraphic good wishes, including one from F.D.R. and one from Huey Long ("I'm for it if it's for me"), the newly founded Yale Political Union had its official opening. President Angell gave his blessing before a distinguished gallery, photographers flashed their bulbs. Political victory went to the Radicals whose abstaining vote resulted in the defeat of the balanced budget.

The year's outstanding theatrical offering put in its appearance at the Shubert, going far to brighten the winter session. For one full week the magnificent artistry of London's own D'Oyley Carte company played to packed houses as there were unfolded one after the other the creations of the famed Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan. One unforgettable night during their New Haven stay, the Savoyards were persuaded to drop into Berkeley College for an after-performance mug of ale and some informal singing. A memorable occasion.

Savoyard Pirates.

We woke one morning to read about how lucky we'd been when we came to Yale as the Class of 1936 and thus just missed those old comprehensive exams which the faculty decided to foist off on '37—we felt even luckier when we saw a sample of one of the exams. The basketball team bestirred itself and handed N.Y.U. a surprise beating, Tommy Wilson exhibiting a style of play that was later to gain him the captaincy.

The Senate, considerably aided by Hearst and Coughlin, vetoed American participation in the World Court.

Then came the Prom. It was the 1936 Prom and thus it was Different. Chairman Hersey and his committee put their heads together and the result was the rejuvenation of card dances, the Grand March, and the splendor of another day. Paul Whiteman's music boomed through Woolsey Hall, the husky-voiced Ramona sang, and the Whiffs entertained at supper. The week-end was rounded out with much ado at the Sheff club after-the-prom dances, the Dramat's performance of Sidney Howard's "Yellow Jack," in which Ripley, Rossbach, Stewart Alsop, Kerr, and Knapp performed creditably, and Saturday night's hockey game and dances. It was the year's second Big Week-end and it upheld the standard successfully. When the laughter and the headaches had died down, we found ourselves wandering around with the classless days of another Reading Period upon us.

Cooke and Mills having already helped to hang one on Princeton, the latter proceeded to skate his way through all Harvard had to offer, and the hockey team ended its season in proud possession of the League crown and the Baker Cup. The same Jimmy Mills carried off the captaincy, and Alex Thompson mounted to the managership throne. On the mats Hadlai Hull, after leading the Eli team through a fairish season, took for himself the 145-lb. New England championship and was runner-up in the Intercollegiates. The Dramat elected Merrill Knapp to its presidency, with Reid, Wesson, and Bodholt holding down other offices. "Roberta" and "Ruggles of Red Gap" made it a more than ordinary movie week.

Then one morning we got out of bed and went to close the window, only to find that it wasn't necessary to close it. We sniffed and found spring in the air. It was the signal. Taylor and Hooker sold the last chances in their box. The Rugby team and the Planter's Punch squad shoved off for Bermuda. The Glee Club filled its gas tanks and drove off towards the Southland. We all decided it was a darn good idea. New Haven took on a deserted air.

SPRING.

When we returned, with our sun-burned skins and our new appreciation for rum, we found Something New awaiting us. Dropping into Yale Station to remove the messages from Gundelfinger, bills from Henry Gold, and advertisements that had accumulated in our mail boxes during the vacation, we drew forth a very much shrunk News. It seems that Stanley Walker had told the boys over at the Briton Hadden edifice that the tabloid size sheet was a Good Thing, and since Billy Phelps said he liked the idea too, they went ahead and indulged in what Chairman Bingham described as "expansion." We shrugged our shoulders, reasoned that the Old Yale was pretty much on the way out anyhow, and thumbed our way through the smaller pages.

Therein we read that Curtin, Rankin, Walker, Bosworth, O'Neill, and the other diamond stars were trying to get the baseball season under way in spite of the spring rainy season that had settled down on New Haven in full measure. Leader's slaves, Castle, Fearey, Belknap, Spock, Allen, Bailey, McCartney, Holmes, and Eggert, were sweating their little hearts out on the river. Loeb, Lassiter, Train, Zellner, and Ritzman were pounding the cinders and throwing things around. Tennis was claiming Ed Mansfield, George Stevens, and Jack McMurtry, while Bob Wilson, Pete Grace, Lou Baldwin, and both Rands were galloping around on ponies.

The Political Union, now firmly established, orated its way through a disapproval of Tammany Hall, denounced a Connecticut gag law, and looked with favor on the private ownership of utilities. Heckscher was elected its new president, with Charlie Woolsey ready to take over the gavel in case of his absence; Lou Goodkind was picked to handle the finances. The Union closed its first year's activities with a session that voted for neutrality and against the League of Nations. In a Foregone Conclusion Election, Heckscher was made head of the Debating Association.

April's rains continued to fall. Knapp attempted to challenge Hersey's position as most officered man in the Class by being picked to head the Glee Club, but John kept one step ahead of him by pulling down the Class Secretaryship. The News got in Mac Farmer's hair with its editorial clamors for a peek at the A.A. ledgers, tried unsuccessfully to convince Dean Mendell that Yale undergraduates were old enough to have telephones in their rooms, and came right out and said which courses were any good and which weren't. At the annual News banquet it turned out that President Angell and Heywood Broun thought somewhat alike. The President: "Let us have sound, individual thinking." Mr. Broun: "Show a man the high places and let him decide for himself."

The New England hillsides suddenly turned bright green, and we put aside our overcoats. The Good Humor man appeared in front of Yale Station. Fears of blackmail by our garage landlords dropped away from us as Dean Mendell announced we could have cars in New Haven if dad said so. Pierson pushed itself forward with an abortive broadcasting station and a Japanese-lanterned Prom. The News, deprived of its annual funny issue by the absence of Derby Day from the calendar, loosed its wit on a Communist issue: Yale was found to be 73% Red, almost completely sovietized, and literally seething with Communism.

Professor Tinker's headgear won an old hat contest. Saybrook's crew walked off with intercollege honors, as did Davenport's baseball team and Pierson's tennis and golf players. The Amalfis gathered for their spring chianti-pling under Amat's patriarchal eye—and had a terrible time trying to get back across the railroad tracks afterwards. We began to miss New York trains by an hour before getting rehabilitated to Daylight time. A man out in Denver started visions of economic prosperity roaring through our little brains: "All you do, Ed, is send out letters to five other people, send a dime to the person at the top of the list, and . . ."

May rolled around and with it that day which had been floating feverishly through our dreams. Five o'clock chimed from Harkness Tower and we stood grouped under the trees in the quiet afternoon sun of Branford courtyard and we talked in low voices and shuffled our feet nervously and when a ripple of handclapping ran through the crowd we craned our necks and some were tapped and some weren't. A milestone slid behind us.

Courses drew to their end. Bursts of applause rang from classrooms, and we retired to the beach at Madison. Boy, it's tough to study on a day like this . . . boy, I wish I'd taken better notes in this course . . . boy, my tutoring school bill is mounting. They arrived, those exams, and we wrote until our wrists stiffened and our fingers numbed, and then sat in the dining halls and had those post-mortem nightmares.

It was June, and we shoved our furniture over to one side of the room, labeled it "do not move," and sallied forth. The scholastic year was at an end.

EPILOGUE.

A few lingered to help 1935 graduate. Knapp's Dramat put on "Hippolytus," with Selena Royle playing a lead. The baseballers took two from Harvard and then set out for Hawaii and the Far East. The tracksters joined forces with Harvard and departed for England. Jim Castle stroked a crew that left President Roosevelt's Crimson a mile or so astern. The tumult and the shouting at the Griswold slowly died away in the distance.

Junior year was over. And as we had come, so we scattered.

CHESTER BROOKS KERR.

Senior

ONE week day afternoon late last August three familiar figures walked into the New Haven Y.M.C.A. and, with an aplomb acquired only by long practice, stepped up and signed the register: Robert H. McCormick, Chicago; Douglas F. Hickok, Goshen, N. Y.; and E. Smith Jackson, Providence, R. I. Another year for the Class of 1936 had officially begun.

But this annual visit was only the first step. Our Senior Year got under way by stages. For instance, the next chapter takes us ahead three weeks and north forty miles, where a husky Gentleman from Georgia is throwing down his suitcase and saying, "How yo' all?" Ducky Pond looks pleased, Manager Frick smiles, and a big fellow named Tiger looks disgusted and yells, "Hello, trouble!" This is the second act. It continues for two weeks, and every night a little watch-charm guard gets out his calendar and says, "Mmm, only 83 more days of football." Finally, after Heinie Gardner has lost twenty pounds and Captain Kim has dropped two or three chins, the boys board a bus, and Senior Year is really looking up. New Haven, and Sprague Hall by twelve o'clock, or "a fine of ten dollars for failure to register at this time." Hello, Ralph. Hello, Fred.

The man on the platform is, of course, our Mr. Buck, and the three who sneaked in the back at five minutes past are, of course, McCartney, Cavanagh, and Mallinson. Finally Mr. Buck begins to talk, and everything is rosy, because he is terribly pleasant (and his rather sly humor draws more laughs than he expected). Most of all there is that air of friendly respect, mingled with a certain amount of quiet resignation. We are Seniors.

That long process of handing out schedules starts, and as usual the Alexanders and the Alsops are out on the ninth green before the Wilsons and the Woolseys leave their seats in the back row. It is all very unjust, but then, as some one remarked, it's the last time we'll have to go through it . . . The last time . . . we hadn't thought of it that way before, and it's a disconcerting idea. This is the last time we'll be inquiring about that "good summer" . . . this is our last football season coming up . . . Gosh, how does that song go—The saddest tale we have to tell . . . In order to eat, we have to pass the College Toasty, and the Grand Opening of Senior Year is complete . . . It's Rosey, all right . . . Rosey all smiles and respect . . . Hello, Mr. Roscoe, it's going to be a great year . . . Hello, Mr. Davis, Hello, Mr. Taylor, Hello, Mr. Herold . . . great year . . . great year . . . It's going to be a great year, Mr. Train. Yeah, hello Rosey—you have to agree . . . It's going to be a great year! . . .

According to the Windmill, Dr. Haggard says Tuesday is the first day we go to classes. That, of course, means The Age of Johnson at 9:10, or better yet, the Age of Tinker. Many of us are meeting the Great Man for the first time, and we are relishing the experience . . . He storms, and he laughs, and he talks in poetic prose . . . And he makes us read and read and read . . . And read we do, first because the ten-minute papers are as regular as the Harkness chimes, and then maybe because we kind of like it . . . It's going to be a great year.

Classes continue . . . John Berdan tells us to "individualize by specific detail" and "vivify by range of appeal" . . . the Daily Theme hunt is on with George O'Neil and Bill Morgan leading the pack . . . George achieves an all-

Along about Wednesday night some twenty per cent of the "Y" men don their "Y's," and the Freshmen are properly impressed. Dark-suit row glares down from the stage of Woolsey, and those prominent Seniors try not to appear nervous as they tell the youngsters what to heel. The toastmaster, ever the card, introduces A.H.II as "Slippery Gus," and the Freshmen fail to laugh. They think that's his real nickname. For the first time Merrill Knapp realizes he's two men in one as he tries to solve a unique problem—how do you persuade half the Class to come out for the Glee Club and the

. . . But the biggest hand of the evening goes to Happy Kim, who smiled three times in the course of his speech . . . Blake (Five Qualities) Shepard sat in the front row, and Holc York gave him a special invitation to come out for Freshman hockey . . . It was 1936's first experience as honest-to-goodness Seniors, and a good time was had by all.

Gleaned from the day's News: Northrup, T. Hall, and Hughes Detained by Mexican Authorities . . . The Auto Rule Is "Under Consideration" . . . Mohicans to Keep Wig Wa'm . . . With the opening game a week off the News came out and advocated better cheering, even going so far as to suggest that perhaps maybe our captains and managers just might not be the men for the jobs. Manager Frick, it turned out, had already been thinking along these lines, and, after all, who was head of the Undergraduate A.A., Byers or Bingham? In the end both the manager and the chairman pulled their necks in. The highly publicized appeal for expert cheer leaders and tumblers brought two candidates, one of them a graduate student and the other a willing lad who thought he'd like to learn tumbling. So Mills, Castle, Thompson, Loeb, Northrup, and Bartholomew went through the motions all season, but Frick had one victory: the boys actually used to practice. Who said Yale plays for fun?

The New Hampshire week-end came at last, and we had our anxiously-awaited chance to watch the Boys in Blue. They behaved nicely, too, with a special consideration for 1936. Luke Loomis delighted every one when he finally got his chance, by scampering all over the lot and eventually romping over for a touchdown. Roscoe threw those bullet passes, Tommy Curtin and Tiger Taylor place-kicked four out of five, and Chooch caught a long one from Jerry to go over for the first touchdown of his bow-legged career, 34-0. But hold everything, Penn held Princeton to 7-6. Hello, Franklin Field.

Meanwhile, "Top Hat's" been revived and all over the campus "It's a Lovely Day to Be Tyin' Up Your White Tie." Leprechaun gets us all excited about Da Muss, until Alsop and McCormick decide to wire the Ethiopian Consul General: "Two Yale Seniors offering services in Italian imposition. Expert marksmen. Ready to leave immediately.(!) Hope you will see fit to accept offer. Answer collect." The E.C.G.'s reply was polite, but firm: "Appreciate offer immensely. Sorry cannot accept." The Pundits gathered round their own peculiar table down at Mory's and decided that Alexander, Barkhausen, Chisholm, Gill, and Lassiter are Punditical, Fred because "the Lassiter should be First-siter." The Whiffs gathered round their table and decided that Case, McKnight, and Pearce are three natural Barflies. Frank, and Train, and 62,000 fans are given a thrill a minute. Every one says it was greatest game, etc., etc., and every one else wishes he'd made the trip. On the whole it was a productive week-end . . .

Ducky produced the joke about his guards getting lost in the long grass (Hello, Hobart) . . . Shoulderpad produced the nickname G.O.P. (Grim Old Puss) for Train, and some of our sports-writing gentry produced some comparisons with Frank Hinkey . . . Deasy and McBurney (They live in Philadelphia) found they had a lot more friends than they thought they had . . .

And Messrs. Woodcock and Farmer found that Yale was now a front-rank drawing card . . . Bring on those Midshipmen.

cans go on the warpath as dark-suited Juniors try to be tactful. More than tact is needed, however. Wilson and Mills go down early, and the casualty list includes Village Smith and Hatchet-face Barclay. McCartney, achieving the unique distinction of being both a Riff and a Mohican, arrived from New York just in time for the party. A lot of talk is heard about the Riffs ("Canshee" Cooke, "O" Lord, "Volunteer" Fairman, "Whoosier" Taylor, "Back-to-the" Farnham, etc.), but for some reason they never appear. Next morning the Dean congratulates Cooke on his excellent control of his organization. The torches flare again on Calcium Night, as the laurels go to Sweet, McMurtry, Barkhausen, Willard, Standart, and the rest of Alpha Delt's ghost delegation.

Next morning we awoke to find that 148 Sophomores had signed up for the frat-clubs and 60,000 spectators for the Navy game. The biggest crowd of the season picked a good one to watch. Hessberg early in the game, and then—glory of glories—Heinie Gardner booted it over for the winning point. Good old Hein—what a thrill that was! The newspapers snatched it up and "the unknown Winnetka youth" was a national hero overnight. Uncle Hein denied it, but the boys in Saybrook swear that he even got perfumed fan letters from high school girls.

Every one was so tickled about Heinie, that it wasn't until Sunday morning that we realized what Yale had done. On that warm afternoon sixteen Elis had fought off three teams of heavier Midshipmen, with Herold, Davis, Train, and Whitehead playing sixty minutes again. And not until Monday did we learn that fifteen men had lost 110 pounds . . . 13 by Herold alone.

Meanwhile, sweet charity, in the form of the Budget Drive, is draining our pockets, except that most of us put it on the term bill. Walker does a workmanlike job, and we go some two thousand dollars over the year before. Pat Lawler drives his Pierson slaves and comes through as first winner of the President's Cup . . . worries about elections for the last time as Aurelian and Torch deliver bids . . . Dave Swift heads Phi Beta Kappa . . . "Seniors Urged to Sit for Class Book Pictures."

Cadet week-end bears down, and 1,000 (count 'em) girls wonder what to wear. As for us, we begin to get excited. After all, 1936 has never seen the Army licked. But even iron men are human, and Yale was tired, too tired. It was a momentous struggle, with Yale game to the end, and it was hard for us to believe the 14-8 on the score board. We cheered and cheered for Captain Kim and his men, who were jarred more by this defeat than by any other all season. Then we filed out of the Bowl feeling blue about it all. There had been a few preliminaries on the Navy week-end, but with Army in town the social season really opened up. Almost all the fraternities gave at least one party, and Leprechaun howled as the News announced: "Pier-son, DKE to Give Dances." It isn't the Yale Daily News anymore, Lep wailed, it's the Pier-son Daily Deke!

Army game also meant a meeting for the Haunt Breakfast Club, those thirteen (not counting O'Neil) ghosts of the night before who rally round two mournings a year for shrouded wheat and spirits. They started at their customary farmhouse in Wood-bridge, and ended up all over the forty-eight states. Master of the Haunts McCormick wasn't seen for days, and Looney Walker had to resort to some typical Walker wit to get back by Monday noon. It seems he was stopped outside of Greenwich and was about to be hauled into court for speeding. "But, officer," said Looley, "I can't go to court now. You see I can't cut Tinker!" The cop must have been the kind of a man you dream about. He let Looley go!

Before we knew it the green paint stories were up again, and again before we knew it a lot of crazy Indians were pulling down goal posts as the score board read, Dartmouth, 14—Yale, 6. You had to blink a couple of times before you believed it was so, but it was. The Jinx (thank goodness) was dead, and an undefeated, untied Dartmouth team had won a square and fair victory. Again Yale was glorious in defeat, and hardened Bowl-goers gasped at an unprecedented sight: the entire Yale side stayed in the stands after the final whistle to give a rousing long cheer for the team! Dartmouth surprised every one by being completely peaceful about it all, and those of us who wanted to compensate the defeat by seeing a good riot were disappointed. Rudy Vallée played in Calhoun, and at the Master's request the lady entertainer sang without the customary "swaying of the body."

The News coins a new word, as a "lackluster" Yale team, with no Kim and no Jerry, beats Brown, 20-0 . . . Tommy Curtin has another big day . . . So do Bingham and party from Trumbull, who sat right behind the Prex . . . At their conference the following Tuesday the President asks the Chairman: "From your experience, Mr. Bingham, do you think there is more drinking at football games

ATHLETICS

VERSATILE in athletics as in everything, the Class of 1936 in Yale College has had rather more than its share of outstanding competitors. To the really penetrating sports observer, men like Train and Whitehead, or Mills and Curtin are the backlogs against which winning teams are built. Mr. Intelligent Spectator knows that a season of smashing defensive play either in the line or behind it is worth a good many spectacular runs in the open field. He is also aware of the fact that a single with men on second and third is just twice as valuable as a long home run with the bases empty, and he distributes his laurel wreaths accordingly. It is precisely this type of athlete that has given Yale her great name on the field of play, and our generation has been blessed with many of them.

It is a relatively simple matter to present a review of the outstanding events in Yale sport during our undergraduate span, and this is our appointed privilege. However, we only wish it were possible to recapture some of the frenzied emotion which all of us have felt in the stands at one time or another. We, as the average 1936 sports fanatic, will never forget how we felt when we watched Larry Kelley running for that touchdown at Princeton or on the occasion when Bob Train knocked over three Tiger interferers and the ball carrier at one fell swoop, thus averting a score; also that gala evening in Payne Whitney when Elmer Ripley's inspired basketball team swarmed all over a haughty and undefeated N.Y.U. quintet—Jimmy Mills' goal which toppled Princeton's hockey team in the last minute of play—we could go on for some time. This is the sort of thing we would like to incorporate into this article, but sports writers are clumsy at revealing emotions, and we will have to be content with plain retrospection.

FOOTBALL

The 1936 sportsmaniac has had some good times in the Bowl and some not so good. Before attempting any systematic review, it is imperative that the miracle of 1934 be pulled out of the file once again. Posterity must know that this was voted the outstanding upset of the year 1934 in sports, and that Whitehead, Roscoe, and Train of our Class were iron men with real inspiration. The blocking and defensive play of Kim and "Choo-choo" were magnificent, and Jerry threw the pass which Sophomore Larry Kelley carried on to the promised land; this, the most famous of all the Roscoe-to-Kelley passes, was actually thrown too high, but Jerry almost always "hung them on a hook," and his quarterbacking was of a uniformly high standard throughout his three years at the position. Unfortunately, Princeton had a little fun of her own in the Bowl, and the less said about the 27-2 and 38-7 defeats of Sophomore and Senior years the better. The latter score, of course, is not indicative of the relative merits of the two elevens, as Captain Whitehead's men played a characteristically gambling game—a point best illustrated by the fact that Roscoe threw four consecutive passes from behind his own goal line, ultimately making Princeton a present of the ball in "pay-dirt" territory as the shades of night fell. It was a laudable and courageous policy, but the score would have been no worse than 18 to 7 if Yale had been conservative. Also, this was generally considered to be the greatest team of all jungle history.

The Harvard fray of Senior year was played in characteristic Cambridge mud, cold, and slush. All of the scores resulted from long passes, Larry Kelley making the first on a typically opportunist completion and fiery Tommy Curtin snagging another long one from Jerry in the shadow of the Red Leg posts. Tom was tackled almost immediately, but Sophomore Al Hessberg carried over on a variation of the good old Columbia "Kf-79," the Blue winning, 14 to 7.

The other four major contests of Kim's team resulted in a percentage of .500. Yale won from Penn at Franklin Field, 31 to 20, after trailing 20 to 12 at the half, as superior condition and incentive combined to run the Red and Blue ragged in the third and fourth quarters. Navy was nosed out, 7 to 6, by virtue of another weak side run by Hessberg and a pinch conversion contributed by Heinie Gardner, a substitute with a kicking toe of pure gold. This game took a lot out of Yale's extremely thin and undermanned line of Blue, as it was played on a hot day against four full Middy elevens. Reaction set in, and the suicidal aspect of the schedule became manifest the next week, when the Army nosed us out, 14 to 8. The fact that the Indians from Hanover descended from the mountains on the following Saturday and outscored the Blue to the tune of 14 to 6 was viewed as a major tragedy at the time, as Dartmouth had never beaten Yale on the grid-iron before, but it was soon possible to view it with equanimity, as it stilled that annoying cry of "jinx," which had hovered over all the well-earned victories which we had won from the Hanoverians.

It is a distinct tribute to the fighting spirit of the Blue and to the crafty offense constructed by Messrs. Pond and Neale that the team went through this sea-going schedule without a single shut-out—at least one touchdown was scored in every game, and the Blue played smart football at all times. A team that can capitalize on the breaks and make good on its scoring opportunities is worthy of all the support it can get, and the Whitehead machine possessed these qualities to the fullest extent.

The story of the '34 and '33 seasons can be briefly told. Clare Curtin's team featured Whitehead, Roscoe, and Train, but Webb Davis, Bernie Rankin, Tommy Curtin, Johnny Hersey, and Butch Schultz played prominent rôles. We, as Juniors, saw this team beat both

Princeton and Harvard, lose a close and rainy 12-6 encounter with Lou Little's Rose Bowlers from Morningside Heights, defeat a green but huge Penn team by the extremely reflective margin of 14-6, wallop a rather hapless Brown outfit to the tune of 37-0, and drop a close 20-12 decision to the Army and Jack Buckler, the nimble Texan who could thread a needle with a forward pass while running at full speed. This was a great game of football to watch, as most Yale-Army encounters are. Dartmouth was nosed out, 7-2, on a touchdown by iron-man Strat Morton, but Georgia caught us when we were pointing for Princeton and administered its fifth straight defeat, 14 to 7.

Sophomore year was spent in comparative gloom, footballistically speaking, as Bob Lassiter's eleven won four and lost four; .500 is an extremely good batting average, but it is not regarded as a successful Yale football season, especially when the defeats are administered by Harvard, Princeton, Georgia, and Army, with the Blue winning only one game of note, that with Dartmouth.

As Freshmen, we watched a Varsity team hold Princeton to a 7-7 tie in the Palmer Stadium and trounce Harvard in another water polo game in the Bowl, 19 to 0. While all this was going on, our own yearling team, led by shorty Webb Davis, the "watch-charm" guard, was going through a highly successful season, featured by a 31-19 win over the Harvards and marred only by a 3-0 loss to Princeton's 1936 prodigies. It was a field goal by Ken Willis of West Haven that did it—dour-visaged Ken, who has been such bitter medicine for his home town to swallow during his four years at Princeton. It was a very good Blue Freshman team, many of whose members were to make great names for themselves in Varsity football.

In this necessarily brief review, it has been impossible to mention individual exploits in the proper order of their occurrence, but there are certain things which must be told. No history of the football feats of the Class of 1936 would be complete without telling something of the story of Webber Davis, who was considered too light for big time competition, but who rounded out a splendid career by playing sixty minutes in almost every major game of his Senior year and being hailed as the "iron man" of his team. The coaches feared that they might lose Webb in the long grass of Franklin Field, but he emerged from behind the blades to make many crucial tackles. Seldom did he see the light of day above his huge adversaries, but he was never outcharged or outblocked by anybody. Train's story is better known; selected on the All-East team which defeated the Western stars during Christmas vacation, Bob was largely recognized as the best defensive end in the game; Ducky Pond declared that Train was the greatest end he had ever seen.

Wandle Water Wagon.

Kim Whitehead has been eulogized by those who should know as one of Yale's greatest captains of all time—certainly he has never been surpassed in sheer inspirational fighting spirit. Tommy Curtin successfully lived down the handicap of being hailed as a "second Albie Booth" and emerged in his Senior year with tenacious drive that gained many invaluable yards. Bernie Rankin, miscast as an end in Sophomore year, returned to his natural spot as a fast and elusive running back; Dick Barr, cheated by a severe knee injury out of the starting rôle which would unquestionably have been his, had his brief moment of glory when he played sixty minutes of savage right tackle against Harvard, only to be injured again the following week. Dick's career was a story of almost unbelievable determination. Luther Loomis emerged from the obscurity of the Jayvees in the fall of Senior year and was one of the shiftest and hardest running backs on the squad. Dick Herold was also misplaced at end during his Sophomore season and did not get a real chance again until he played a steady and intelligent game at center throughout the final fall.

Other names there are, and other incidents, but these are the ones which come immediately to mind. Season's records, scores of games, and brilliant deeds receive their space in the public prints, but to the Class of 1936, these names tell the real story of Yale football.

HOCKEY

Our Class will always point with particular pride to Jimmy Mills and Bob Cooke. Both were developed in the "Cradle of Hockey," St. Paul's School, both play right wing, and both are fast and clever. Jimmy captained the Freshman team, playing mainly on the defense, and later led the Varsity, alternating between right wing and center. Bob was probably the trickiest stick-handler on the team and a consistent star throughout his four years; he led the Varsity in scoring with 21 points in Senior year and was closely followed by his captain with 18.

The Freshman season was mediocre, both Princeton and Harvard taking the measure of the Millsmen, the former 3-1, and the latter by the decisive count of 7-1. Jimmy scored our point against the Tigers, and Eddie Pillsbury counted against the Crimson. These were the only two outside games lost, but they were important ones! Frank Luce had done a nice job with only fair material, however, as only six members of his squad were of Varsity calibre.

As Sophomores, we saw Joe Gilligan's team win eight and lose the same number; the season was eminently successful, however, as both Harvard and Princeton were subdued, the former in a New Haven play-off. The Canadian trip resulted in narrow defeats by McGill and Toronto, and these same formidable outfits repeated their victories in return engagements at the Arena, by 3-2 and 2-1 margins. Dartmouth beat us in Hanover, but the Blue turned the tables at New Haven. Mills, Cooke, Pillsbury, and Shepard played varied rôles; Jimmy scored two unassisted goals in the first Princeton game, and Bob contributed several important assists.

The '34-'35 campaign was a Blue triumph; Johnny Snyder, one of Yale's great goalies of all time, led a sextet that won fifteen games and a Quadrangular League championship, while losing only six. The Christmas trip resulted in losses to the ever-powerful McGill and Toronto outfits and twin victories over the strong Minnesota team. McGill was turned back, 2-1, in a thriller at the Arena, and other extra-League accomplishments were victories over the Boston Olympics and that perpetual thorn, little Clarkson Tech. This was a splendid Yale team, featuring a high-scoring second line in the persons of Tommy Rodd, Roger Shepard, and Doug Robinson, a stellar defenseman in George "Penalty-box" Robson, and an

All-American goalie in Captain John Snyder; Holc York might well be proud of these boys. Princeton was trounced in straight games, as was Dartmouth, and although Harvard beat us by 4-1 in New Haven, Jimmy Mills showed his usual flair for scoring against the Crimson and put in four counters during the series, which ended in a Blue victory in the play-off, 3-2. Both Blue wins were registered in Boston Garden, and the season came to a glorious climax in the enemy back yard.

Unfortunately, Holcombe's statement that Yale hockey goes in two-year cycles was manifest in the winter of our Senior year. A short-handed Blue team played through the hardest schedule in Yale hockey history, and it was a tired bunch that lost to Harvard's great team in the final game of the season. McGill and Toronto were too good for us, and the Canadians from Clarkson, the New York Rovers, the St. Nicks, and the U.S. Olympic team were others that outscored the Blue. Dartmouth went down to defeat, 7-3, in New Haven, but reversed the decision in Hanover. The outstanding accomplishment of an otherwise mediocre campaign was the magnificent victory over Princeton in a play-off waged in the New Jersey jungle, Bob Cooke went on a rampage and tallied three times, and Jimmy put in one as his team sent the haughty Tigers down to defeat. This was really the climax of the season for Mills' tired team, and the boys did not have much left with which to combat the greatest team in Harvard history. This game resulted in an 11-0 trouncing administered by Fred Moseley's men, and the Blue puck-chasers were glad to call it a day.

Tigers in the Arena.

The light flickered.

Tommy Stockhausen made a magnificent come-back from a leg injury which had kept him on the sidelines since Freshman year and played a strong game in the nets throughout the season, being particularly brilliant against the Canadians. Lyn Wilson and Blake Shepard teamed up on the defense, and did some rugged body checking, although they, as well as the rest of the sextet, were handicapped by a lack of adequate replacements. Eddie Pillsbury was useful wherever Holc saw fit to play him, which was just about everywhere except in the goal. All in all, it was like a repetition of the football season; a short-handed team playing a suicide schedule with courage and frequent inspiration.

BASEBALL

Crack of bat against ball, and the horsehide starts a soaring flight towards the outer gardens. The bench warmers spring to their feet in excitement, but Clyde merely says, "Calm down boys, it's just a fly ball; just another fly to the outfield."

Clyde Engle saw a lot of those fly balls during the spring of '33, but he also saw a good many safe hits and sparkling play in the field, as his Freshman team compiled a record of six won and three lost. There were some potent stick-wielders on the club, but the pitching was not exactly unhittable; otherwise, the team would probably have been undefeated. Louie Walker was switched from third base to the mound in midseason and did the only effective twirling of the spring. Kim Whitehead, who gave up baseball after his Freshman year, Tommy Wilson, Captain Tom Curtin, and Dick Cummins all smote the spheroid with vigor and consistency as Columbia, Dartmouth, Andover, and Roxbury were mowed under. Unfortunately, the team lost to the Crimson Freshmen in a hectic contest featured by many errors and a little extra-curricular pugilism.

Tommy Curtin was the only member of this colorful organization to find a regular berth with Joe Wood's 1934 Varsity edition, and Tom starred consistently, hitting well over three hundred and fielding his position steadily. This club lost the first game to Harvard in Cambridge as Captain George Parker dropped a close pitching duel, and Joe, after casting about desperately for a starting hurler in the game at New Haven on the following day, came up with Bernie Rankin. All Bean did was to shut out the Crimson to the tune of 2-0; it was the first dose of whitewash administered by any Yale or Harvard pitcher in the last decade, and it started the mystic spell which Rankin has woven about Crimson bats throughout his career on the Eli mound. However, the season was rather a poor one, as the nine finished next to last in the League, and the gloom of the composite picture was lightened only by a straight games defeat of Princeton and the aforementioned victory over Harvard.

Junior year was an epoch-maker in Yale baseball, not so much because of any sensational record compiled by the Varsity—it was, in fact, rather spotty—but on account of the summer trek to the Orient. This Japanese extravaganza was not exactly all-conquering, either, but it marked a new development in Yale sport and a magnificent opportunity for the members of the team.

They spent a pleasant two weeks in Honolulu, where they managed to take three out of eight from the Hawaiian semi-pros. In the land of the rising sun the heat was a serious obstacle, but after the Blue nine got a little better acclimated they displayed a good brand of baseball and came through with four well-earned wins against seven defeats by the crack Nipponese teams. Bernie Rankin pitched some very good ball, turning in two victories in his best Cambridge form.

Another interesting irregularity in the heretofore even trend of Yale baseball was the formation of the "Cougars," a swashbuckling outfit of free-lance ball players under the guidance of Robert Barbour Cooke, 1936. As the moving spirit of this club, Bob compiled a schedule of representative games, and the Cougars played through it with varying success—a success that was largely dependent upon whether the stars felt like showing up that day or not. Typical Cougar motto: "I will never attempt a bunt or sacrifice of any sort, but will always take my full cut at that ball."

The Varsity record itself was not startling; Messrs. Curtin, Walker, Rankin, Bosworth, O'Neil, Cummins, and Bob Houde assisted in winning eleven and losing nine games. One of the season's high spots was an 8-7 defeat of the League-leading Dartmouth nine, as Sophomore Walt Klimczak knocked in the winning run with his fifth hit of the day. The Princeton series was divided after another Sophomore, Ted Horton, had shut out the Tigers in a six-inning encounter, and the first Harvard game went to the Crimson on a thrilling thirteenth-inning home run. However, Bernie Rankin came back the following day to throw strikes past the mystified Red Legs once again, thus giving the Elis a chance to play a rubber game. This was a special contest arranged for boat race day on a high school field in New London, and Ted Horton rose magnificently to the occasion by hurling the Blue to a decisive win over her dearest foes. Thus ended the campaign, and although the Blue had not won a League title since the halcyon or Broaca era, prospects looked bright for Captain Tommy Curtin's men as this was written.

TRACK

One name completely overshadows the Yale track vista during the period with which we are concerned. Keith Brown was an athlete of national importance during both his prep school and Varsity careers, and, although we unfortunately cannot claim him as a member of 1936, no history of Yale track during our time would be worth a hoot that did not include something of his story.

Keith had what was probably his greatest day during our Freshman year, and quite a day it was. After soaring to a height of fourteen feet, one and one-half inches, in the vault, he proceeded to high jump six, six and one eighth. Both of these were glittering new records, and supplanted those of famous Yale trackmen Sabin Carr and Wesley Oler, respectively; these performances occurred in the Harvard meet.

Brown captained the team in our Junior year, and before graduation he was or had been the possessor of the following championships; the I.C.4A. indoor and outdoor vaulting crowns, the indoor high jumping title, and the National A.A.U. indoor and outdoor vaulting sceptres. Besides this, he conquered the great Californian, Bill Graber, at an indoor meet in Madison Square Garden and set a world's indoor vault record at the height of fourteen-four. The best was yet to come, however; as a fitting climax to a great career, Keith vaulted fourteen feet, five and one-eighth inches in the Harvard Stadium in May of his Senior year—this was a height greater than man had ever achieved before, under any conditions. Probably the greatest figure that Yale track had ever known, it is only fitting that our Class should join in acclaiming him.

World's champion.

1936 can point to no Browns or Karl Warners, but it has contributed several prominent athletes to the Varsity teams of the last two years. Giving an equal balance of strength both to the cinders and in the field, these classmates have also established rather a unique record; they have never lost a meet to Princeton or won from Harvard, either as Freshmen or on the Varsity. Some of the more prominent names are those of Captain Art Loeb, weight man extraordinary, Tommy Ritzman, a very consistent broad jumper, Dave Dellinger, cross country captain, Wes Burlingame, a sprinter who led the Freshmen, Chooch Train in the shot, and Fred Lassiter in the discus.

As we glance at the record, it is obvious that 1933 was the most successful season. Karl Warner, considered the greatest runner to wear the Blue since the war, was never beaten in dual meet competition, and broke 49 seconds consistently in the 440. Captain Crowley was invincible in the discus, and the Varsity won all its dual meets, except for an astonishing $67\frac{1}{2}$ - $67\frac{1}{2}$ tie with Princeton, and finished in a third place tie in the Intercollegiates. Burlingame's Freshmen won two of their three dual meets, beating Andover and Princeton but losing to Harvard.

1934 saw Yale losing its annual winter meet with Cornell, but winning from a Princeton team that featured iron-man Bill Bonthron, one of America's great middle distance runners of all time, Bonthron won the 800, 1500, and 3000 meter races for the second year in a row. Harvard swamped the Blue in the Stadium, 73-62. In May Coach Kanaly's men finished second in the I.C.4A. meet in Philadelphia—this was a remarkable showing for an Eastern college, as the Blue finished only nine points behind the omnipotent Stanford team.

The spring of 1935 was rather a lean one as far as intercollegiate performances were concerned, as Yale placed fifth indoors and eighth in the Harvard Stadium in May. The Heptagonal games had their inception during this season—this was an intercollegiate meet between the "Ivy Colleges" of the East. Yale sent twenty-eight men who scored $28\frac{3}{4}$ points to bring the Blue in fourth—not a particularly good showing. In dual meets, Brown's team beat Princeton, but lost to Harvard for the first time in nineteen years in a New Haven meet. Train, Loeb, and Ritzman—it was Tommy's second time on the team—were picked for the Yale-Harvard combination to go to England, and curtains were drawn on the home season.

In England, the Yale-Harvard combination nosed out the Englishmen, $6\frac{1}{2}$ – $5\frac{1}{2}$. Train placed second to Joe Johnson in the shot, but the other '36 entrants could do no better than third, as the ubiquitous Keith Brown broke the British pole vault record with a leap of fourteen feet.

Yale track is steadily on the up grade under the capable Frank Kanaly and bids fair to regain some of the greatness which was achieved in 1925, when the Blue gave the California teams their only defeat since the war.

CREW

"The Old Man," as Yale's oarsmen respectfully refer to Coach Ed Leader, must have had a slight feeling of relief when he looked at the roster of the Harvard graduating Class of 1933. Such names as Cassedy, Saltonstall, Bacon, and Bancroft were included in the list of departing Harvard B.A.'s and these rugged Cantabs had made things exceedingly miserable for Leader's crews during their three-year career. Typical of the sort of thing these fellows did was the race in our Freshman year, when Ed brought a very smooth and well-coördinated eight to Gales Ferry. This boat had won both the Blackwell and Carnegie cups and was conceded to be the best sprint crew in the East, if not in the country, but it did not have the staying power to beat these Harvard sluggers in a four-mile race; thus, a Cassedy-stroked crew emerged victorious on the Thames for the third straight year. It was beginning to be annoying.

Those long-delayed fruits of victory were ripening fast, however; the Freshmen, stroked by Horace Havemeyer, coxed by Joe Holmes, captained by Gordon Fearey, and coached by Fred Spuhn, had had a brilliant year, beating Columbia, Penn, Princeton, Cornell, and Harvard. One strange feature of this Freshman season is worth noting. Jim Castle, who was subsequently to stroke his way to the captaincy of the Varsity, was never on the first yearling crew throughout the year.

The spring of 1934 saw an undefeated Varsity crew. Allen was the only regular member from 1936, but Late McCartney was a last-minute substitution for Jim Agen at number 3 in the Carnegie Cup regatta and rowed a cool and steady race as the Blue came home in front of Cornell and Princeton. Joe Holmes directed his resonant tones at the boat from his coxswain's seat throughout the campaign, as Leader's boys rowed away from M.I.T., Penn, Columbia, and Harvard. This last race was doubly satisfying coming after the three-year drought, and, to make it better, the Elis broke the downstream record for the four-mile course on the Thames. The Junior Varsity also conquered the Cantabs by a two and one-half length margin, as Havemeyer, Field, Wadelton, McCartney, Spock, Bailey, and Belknap pulled oars in the boat captained by Jimmy Castle.

Bill Kilborne's 1935 crew had a good season as well, although they lost to Penn in a sensational upset on the Schuylkill. This boat pulled away from the M.I.T. engineers on Lake Quinsigamond and also defeated Columbia for the Blackwell Cup, but the Carnegie few yachts of the original tremendous flotilla which stayed over saw a Yale parade. The Crimson was beaten by fifteen lengths, a colossal trouncing, and one which must have caused considerable pain to the Presidential party, as Harvard's Franklin D. Roosevelt had come to see his son in action. Jimmy

Castle stroked this boat, Bob Belknap rowed bow, and Joe Holmes coxed his usual intelligent race. Bailey, Spock, and Allen all saw considerable action on the Varsity crew during the year, and Late McCartney fell prey to an unfortunate injury as he was about to be promoted to the first shell.

The Jayvees went through an unblemished campaign and also defeated Harvard. Joe Eggert coxed the boat, and McCartney, Allen, Bailey, Spock, Fearey, and Belknap all played prominent rôles—the latter before his promotion to the Varsity. The Harvard regatta marked the second year in a row that the Blue has swept the water by winning all four races, and the period of supremacy thus shifted definitely to Yale. The Jayvees were awarded major "Y's" for beating Harvard, and everything was merry among the oarsmen.

Castle, as captain, is leading a seasoned group into this coming season, and with such men as Allen, Belknap, Bailey, Fearey, Field, McCartney, Spock, and Wadelton to work with, at this writing everything points towards a continuation of the Blue sway—as far as the Class of 1936 is concerned, Harvard never could row a boat!

BASKETBALL

Elmer Ripley is no longer on the scene teaching his men to make those quick cuts for the basket, and Ken Loeffler has replaced him as Varsity mentor, but Elmer coached our Freshman five, and it won 12 and lost two, topping both Princeton and Harvard en route. Dick Cummins was captain, and the stars were Dick Barr, Bob Train, Tommy Curtin, and Tommy Wilson. Of these men, only Wilson has gone on to Varsity heights, as the others dropped out of basketball. Cummins has played spasmodically since, but has been hampered by a bad knee.

During this winter Bob O'Connell was leading a Varsity five to the League title, as Earl Nikkel, Ben Reese, Eggie Miles, Bill Saner, and Carson Elliott played some brilliant basketball.

ratic outfit that provided many thrills and almost as many groans, as it won 14 and lost 9, winning two from Harvard, splitting with Princeton, and breaking even in its League games. Wilson held down the pivot post part of the time and also saw considerable action at forward. However, all of the previous year's League champions with the exception of O'Connell were back, and there was not much chance for new men to break in.

Eggie Miles captained the '35 team, playing his usual swashbuckling game at his guard post, but there was still not much room for the hoopsters of the Class of '36, only Tommy Wilson making the grade on a team composed of Seniors Miles, DeAngelis, Klein, and Ned Wilson and Sophomores Beckwith and Bud Miles. This five was not sensational, finishing low in the League and splitting with Harvard and Princeton; however, they did upset the sensational N.Y.U. five.

Wilson was elected captain of the '36 unit and has led a team on which classmates McNeil, Murray, and Cummins have seen some action. Getting off to a discouraging start under Ken Loeffler, the team lost its first ten games, but was bolstered by the advent of Larry Kelley, who decided to come out, and Bob Beckwith, who got off probation; immediately, things began to look up, and the boys began to apply Loeffler's interpretation of the zone defense with great effectiveness and also to throw the leather through the hoops with accuracy and élan. To date, the team is tied for third place in the League and will probably finish there; an extremely creditable showing after a woeful start.

SWIMMING

King Neptune, or Bob Kiphuth, has maintained Yale's hegemony over the country's natators throughout our college course. Our consecutive victory mark is unprecedented in the annals of intercollegiate sport, and it is becoming more and more unprecedented at every moment.

Freshman year saw a successful but mediocre team—by Yale standards. Captain Penn, diver Bill Myer, and Norrie Hoyt in the backstroke were the individual stars of an outfit which trounced both Princeton and Harvard and lost only one meet!

The winter of Sophomore year was marked by a trail of broken records. Bob turned Norrie Hoyt into a free-styler, and Norrie matched Captain Joe Barker, the intercollegiate 440 champion, stroke for stroke. Dave Livingston broke the 220 intercollegiate standard and Walt Savell the 200-yard breaststroke mark, while the crack medley relay team of Livingston, Savell, and Pierson was lowering the 300-yard medley relay record to 3:04.

Versatility.

Dave Livingston was at the helm of the 1935 team, and it went through an undefeated season—imagine! Norrie Hoyt, finally finding his true stride, broke the Yale record for the 440 in the brilliant time of 4:56. The relay team of Cooke, Rogers, Wilson, and Livingston lowered the 400-yard relay standard to 3:34, a mark that still stands. The Blue swimmers blanketed the Eastern championships in New York, but did not fare so well in the National Collegiates held at Harvard, as Michigan's individual stars dominated the scene.

The 1936 season sees Yale with probably the greatest team in her history; John Macionis, a Sophomore, is rated among the three greatest swimmers in the country and has already lowered the inter-collegiate 220 mark to 2:10:6. Captain Norrie Hoyt has found his peak and has cracked the Yale record in the backstroke, his old hobby, setting a figure of 1:41:4. The free-stylers, Cooke, Rogers, Willcox, Bronson, Howland, and Brueckel make up a powerful group, and to date the men of Kiphuth have kept that record clean. It is fortunate indeed that the Blue is unusually powerful this year, as Rutgers, Princeton, and Harvard are all possessed of their greatest teams and are greater threats than ever before.

The Blue has several prominent candidates for the U.S. Olympic team, and as the National Collegiates are to be held in Payne Whitney this spring, it would not be surprising to see at least three Yale swimmers carrying her name into the international waters.

WRESTLING

Eddie and Johnny O'Donnell have had some formidable material from '36. Bob Graham, Hadlai Hull, Al Lindeke, Frank Rawolle, and Herbie Stern have done a lot of expert grappling, and with their graduation, Eddie will have some gaping holes to fill.

Bob Graham, wrestling at 175 pounds, led the Freshmen through a good season, which saw the boys defeat both Princeton and Harvard and lose only one meet out of eight. Sid Stein was a splendid unlimited man, but was forced to drop out because of his bad knees.

ous year. Lehigh won as usual, and Princeton, with her strongest team, nosed us out $17\frac{1}{2}$ to $10\frac{1}{2}$. Graham almost threw Captain Triede of Princeton, but was himself thrown, and the meet turned on that result. Hull was Yale's most brilliant grappler; he won the New England intercollegiate 145-pound championship in 1935 and was runner-up for two years in the Nationals. All the other wrestlers from our Class were consistently strong, Al Lindeke, in particular, putting in four years of extremely effective

In Sophomore year Ferdie Haase's men won five and lost only to Princeton and Lehigh; Hull, Graham, and Lindeke were on the team and have remained on it ever since. Hadlai was elected captain for his Junior year and starred consistently, while Graham, Lindeke, and Frank Rawolle aided the cause. The boys dropped decisions to Harvard and the ever-potent Lehigh grapplers, but won all the rest.

Bobby Graham succeeded Hull to the leadership in Senior year, and Herbie Stern entered the ranks, wrestling at 125 pounds, while Lindeke and Rawolle filled the same positions as in the previ-

All the other wrestlers from our Class were consistently strong, Al Lindeke, in particular, putting in four years of extremely effective competition and Herbie Stern emerging in Senior year to compile the excellent record of 4 won, 1 tied, and 2 lost.

Except for that consistent nemesis, Lehigh, which invariably has the best wrestlers in the East, if not the country, the Blue has done exceptionally well, and our Class has had more than one finger in the pie.

BOXING

Mosey King, who has been connected with what W. O. McGeehan used to call the "cauliflower industry" at Yale for some thirty years or more, has done some great things with his inexperienced material.

Our Class has contributed some good fighters to the cause; Wid Cates was captain of a fine Freshman team, but has been forced out of the sport by an injury. Other fearsome men with the gloves from '36 are Frank Newman, "Killer" Levine, Nat Gennett, Abe Smick, Oggie Brouwer, Huston Huffman, Luke Loomis, Dave Northrup, and Dick Barr. These are all "very clever boys," as the trade would have it, and they have outpunched Penn and Cornell every year, shared honors with the Army and the Coast Guard, and have usually been on the receiving end from Harvard, although the meet of Senior year resulted in a tie at 4-4, as Huston Huffman won a very close decision from Olney of the Crimson. The Cantabs had been undefeated prior to this match and put up quite a squawk about this decision, but the fight was unquestionably Yale's according to the intercollegiate rules which governed the contest.

Huffman and Oggie Brouwer were elected co-captains for our Senior year, but it unfortunately developed that both had to fight at the same weight, hence a bout between the two was necessary. It was a good one to watch, and so close that the decision in favor of Huffman might well have gone the other way.

A man's world.

Yale boxing is in a very colorful and healthy condition under Mosey, and the writer, quoting Dan Mulvey, the New Haven sports oracle, "hopes that Mosey King will be coaching for thirty years more."

SOCCER

Captain Pete Pond led his booters through one of those magnificent rarities, an undefeated and untied season, which culminated not only in Yale's first Big Three championship in years, but also in an Eastern intercollegiate title. So lustrous a record was this that the Athletic Association got together in secret conclave and awarded major "Y's" to all those involved.

Soccer, which attracts countless myriads to the gate in the British Isles, has never attained a comparable popularity in this country, but its adherents and players are staunch enthusiasts, and the Association football addicts of Yale University are no exception. Coach Leeman has labored long and hard, and the fruition of his efforts were a great satisfaction to all concerned.

Joe Upton—like Pond, an embryo scientist from the wilds of Shefftown—captained the Freshman team, which won seven, lost one, to Princeton, and tied one. In 1933 the Varsity won five and lost three, the '34 unit won six, lost two, and tied one, and the glorious climax has already been noted. Recipients of the major award from our Class were, besides Sheffman Pond, Pete Belin, Wimby Coerr, I. L. Levine, J. H. Stanger, and Tom Ward. It was a great team, fully deserving of its unusual honor and numbering among its victims such formidable opponents as Navy, Springfield, Dartmouth, Penn, Princeton, and Harvard.

RUGBY

Rugby football at Yale is conducted according to the best English traditions of the sport, and everybody has lots of fun. Lest this statement be liable to misconstruction, the assertion is immediately made that the Blue Rugby side always plays to win, and plays its hardest; by English tradition is implied merely a splendid informality of organization and a negligible set of training rules.

"Ruggah," as it is known on the other side of the water, is not a game for sissies. This becomes apparent when one casts a glance at the following group of past and present team members—Wilbur, Williamson, Howland, Grosscup, Morton, Lynch, Roscoe, Whitehead, Davis, and Frank; this is to name just a few of the more rugged individuals and to forget a lot more.

Every year this bunch of stalwarts makes a trip to Bermuda and plays three or four games in this lovely spot. The stories about this particular jaunt are too many and well known to warrant repetition here, but the Yale-Harvard meeting of last spring will serve as a glistening example. Harvard had a skilful side composed mainly of English graduate students who knew the game from A to Z; Yale's team was made up of bruisers most of whom had never seen Rugby before, let alone played it. Score of the contest; Yale 3, Harvard 0. The Blue points were scored on a penalty try kicked by novice Ben Grosscup, which hit the bar and bounced over. How did Yale win? By putting on pressure and then more pressure; by tackling so savagely and running so hard that Harvard's Englishmen thought they had run up against a reënactment of the battle of Bunker Hill.

Captain Vic Despard has succeeded Strat Morton at the helm and has organized what looks like an unbeatable team for the coming spring. Yale has won a lot of Rugby games in the last three years that it had no business to win, and there is no reason for believing that this state of affairs will not continue—other teams may grumble about the Blue's lack of finesse and steam-roller tactics, but who holds the cup? The answer is easy!

150-POUND FOOTBALL

Of the six members of our Class who reported for lightweight football during the 1933 season, only Bill Hughes and Doug Northrop carried on for the whole three years. However, both were outstanding backfield luminaries during their entire careers, and Northrop co-captained the team with Tad Jones of Shefftown during the fall of Senior year. Brad Smith was a mainstay of the forward wall for two years and was elevated to the leadership at the conclusion of the 1934 campaign, but could not make the weight and was forced into the cold, cruel world with Stew Scott's Jayvees.

The 1933 unit won two 12-0 decisions from Lafayette and Villa-nova, but was nosed out by the perennially powerful Rutgers lightweights, 12-6, and also dropped a 20-12 contest to Princeton to complete a mediocre record. King and Gratwick took over the tackle positions during the 1934 season, and the team made its best record during our time, losing only to Princeton and Rutgers in hard-fought encounters.

Brawn in miniature.

Last season saw the inauguration of the 150-pound League, composed of Penn, Lafayette, Villanova, Yale, Princeton, and Rutgers. The Blue, handicapped by lack of material and injuries, won only two of their League games from Lafayette and Villanova, although the Penn game at Franklin Field was lost by only one touchdown as both teams ran wild offensively. Other members of 1936 who have played on the fifties at one time or another are Kling, Gilpatric, Lee, Standart, Cavanaugh, and Chatfield. "Pluggety Ed" Foster succeeded Herb Miller as head coach after Sophomore year and has done well with rather sparse material.

FENCING

Only four men from the large group which reported to Coach Grasson in Freshman year have kept on with the sport throughout college, but those four have been of considerable importance in Yale fencing. Hal Holcombe, who captained both his yearling and Varsity teams, has been wielding the foils with great success; George Gafford, who specializes in the épée, has been on the Olympic squad this winter, and Ed and Archie Deming, both '36 Sheff, have been steady performers, the latter as number one saber man and the former as a substitute in both foil and épée.

The Freshman team won seven meets and lost only to Princeton, and Norm Bullard's '33-'34 array defeated both Harvard and Princeton, although they lost five meets. Jimmy Tompkins was captain of the fencers in our Junior year, and his men won four and dropped the same number, defeating Harvard success, as thus far the team has been impressive both in execution and result.

POLO

From the twenty men who reported to Coach Wedemyer in the fall of Freshman year, a squad of nine was kept, and a championship array resulted. Rufus Wesson at No. 1, R. E. L. Wilson at No. 2, and W. B. Rand at No. 3 played through an indoor season marred only by a 10-9 defeat by Army and trounced both Princeton and Harvard. Royal, Gates, and Baldwin also saw action with this group.

Rand and Wilson at Nos. 1 and 2, respectively, were immediately chosen for the Varsity in Sophomore year and, together with Jay Secor, '35, at No. 3, played through the season. Army was beaten, 13-7, and the team also swept the West, defeating Detroit, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh, all on strange floors with unfamiliar mounts. Returning East, these horsemen knocked over the Tigers, but were nosed out by Harvard, 13½-12. In the Indoor Intercollegiates played in New York, the Blue lost a heartbreaker to Princeton in the finals after outriding both Harvard and Army. Meanwhile, Royal, Wesson, Ryerson, and Gates were distinguishing themselves on the all-powerful Jayvees.

The '34-'35 season saw Bud and Pete Dominick emerging from the Freshman ranks, and a new lineup of Rand at 1, P. Dominick at 2, and B. Dominick at 3 had a successful season, outscoring P.M.C. and Princeton. Secor, Rand, Wilson, and B. Dominick went out West and defeated Cleveland, $17\frac{1}{2}$ - $13\frac{1}{2}$, but lost to Detroit by a narrow margin. Harvard and Army beat them after their return, but Secor, Wilson, and Pete Dominick went to the finals in the Intercollegiates, losing in the last twenty seconds to Army by half a point.

Bobby Wilson captained the '35-'36 horsemen, and, despite the loss of Secor, the team has been uniformly successful to date, losing only to Cleveland and Army, beating Fort Sheridan of Chicago, $10\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$, and trouncing the Cleveland highwaymen. Harvard has been beaten twice and Princeton by an 18-3 margin. The two Dominicks and Seniors Rand, Ryerson, Royal, and Baldwin have helped greatly in compiling this record; Yale's chances in the Intercollegiates seem very good.

The same members of our Class that have so distinguished themselves in indoor polo have also figured prominently outdoors. Peter Grace, a devotee of the hockey nets during the winter, has contributed his skilful services to the fresh air malletmen and was elected captain for the season of 1936.

The Freshmen were undefeated and administered a thorough trouncing to Princeton by an 8-0 count. The '34 Varsity was not so successful, losing to Army and Harvard, playing a 6-6 tie with P.M.C., and beating Princeton. Wilson and Grace joined Snow and Secor for the Intercollegiates, but were speedily eliminated. Jay Secor captained the team last spring, and Pete Dominick rode with Bobby Wilson and Pete Grace through a very successful season. Losing only to Army by an 8-5 score, this quartet defeated P.M.C., 14-2, and Princeton, 9-3. The Intercollegiates were a triumph for the Blue, as the cup returned to New Haven for the first time since the golden, or Guest, era of Yale polo. Wilson, Grace, Secor, and Pete Dominick were the fair-haired horsemen that did the trick, beating Princeton, 3-2, Army, 10-9, and Harvard, 10-2. The team was awarded major "Y's" as the result of this feat, and deservedly.

Grace will lead the team this spring, and as Secor's is the only place that must be filled, prospects are bright.

The quality of Yale squash has improved tremendously since the advent of the College Plan. The accessibility of the courts has made the game feasible for the "masses," and its resultant popularity has been obvious to those who tried to get a court during the winter months.

National professional champion Johnny Skillman has had his finger in the Yale squash pie, too, and the teams have been growing steadily more formidable since he was engaged to help out the overworked Bill Hinchcliff, who had had to divide his attention between tennis and squash. So great has been the regeneration of the Blue in this sport that the teams are now a match for any one, with the possible exception of Harvard, whose long squash hegemony is still being preserved.

Our Class did not contribute any one to the 1934 Varsity, and this team had rather a woeful season—draw your own inferences! In 1935 Captain Baldy Terry's men did much better, as he, Frank Rogers, Bill Stockhausen, John

With good right arm.

Strauss, and two Sophomores, Hollister and Davie, brightened up the picture considerably; the team annexed the Connecticut State title and made a creditable record in dual meets. Joe Holmes, who won the championship of our Class in Freshman year, has probably been our most consistent player throughout college, but has been hampered greatly by an old injury which kept him on disability a great deal.

This year the Skillmen again showed vast improvement and crushed several strong metropolitan club teams, besides going through League and intercollegiate competition undefeated—this included two smashing wins from Princeton—until that fateful Harvard match, when the Cantabs again exerted their sway. The matches were close, though, and that day is not far distant when the Blue will be winning its share of matches from Harvard.

Skillmen.

Joe Holmes, Jack Graham, George Clemens, and Charlie Audette were the members of 1936 who "dug them out of the corners" for the Varsity this winter, and all were instrumental in compiling the best record of any Yale squash team in history.

CROSS COUNTRY

Yale has never had much in the way of distance runners, at least nothing comparable to her array of sprinters and stars in the field events. Names like Macauley Smith and Wilbur Woodland stand out like beacon lights in a somber field, and the Class of '36 has not contributed anything startling in that line. Dave Dellinger has done some good running, and Gosling, Marvin, Sherk, Berg, and Tracy have aided the cause, but the Elis have not exactly swept the hills and dales.

Our Freshman team lost all three of its meets, but Johnny Turley, who captained the Varsities of both '33 and '34, led his team to better things, losing only to Cornell in '33 and to Harvard in '34. The triangular meet with Princeton and Harvard was held over the New Haven course in the fall of '33, and was a sensational one to watch; Bill Bonthron, Princeton's great miler, was leading until within a hundred yards from the tape, where he collapsed, and Playfair of Harvard went on to win; however, Yale took the meet.

Dave Dellinger's team won two dual meets, but was outrun by Cornell, Harvard, and Princeton and did not prove much of a threat in the I.C.4A.'s. The graduation of such men as Al Minor, Morris Canning, and Watson had hurt severely, and, although the team was possessed of an outstanding individual star in Wilbur Woodland, a Junior, it was not well balanced.

GOLF

Golf at Yale is almost comparable to swimming; Ben Thomson has had some great material to work with, and he has invariably made the most of it. He and the departed Jack Ryan have watched such smooth performers as Johnny Parker, Sid Noyes, Ollie Transue, Law Weatherwax, Pipey Warner, and a host of less famous but almost equally skilful linksmen.

"In the Spring—."

Ken Parker was at the helm of our Freshman team, which won six matches and lost only to Harvard. Eshelman, Levinson, and Wilson were the big names, but only Eshelman and Levinson have contributed much to Varsity golf, as Parker was severely injured and has had difficulty regaining his timing, although he did see action on Ollie Transue's '34 team before his accident. This array was up to standard; it won thirteen encounters and lost to Princeton—later in the season it swamped this same outfit in a return engagement. The Eastern Intercollegiate Championship was annexed once again, and another great Yale team went on its way.

Nice and easy.

Freddy Town was captain and number one man last spring; teamed with the steady and imperturbable Herbie Eshelman, he led the team to another championship, losing only one match, to the alumni. Johnny Levinson had a good season as well, although none of our individual entrants managed to qualify in the National Intercollegiates, an unprecedented situation in Yale, which has been known to put two men in the finals—Tommy Aycock and Forbes Wilson, to be exact. Shades of Jess Sweetser!

Herbie Eshelman will captain this year's golfers, and with men like Levinson, Parker, Munson, McInerney, Fisher, and Jamison around, Yale predominance on the links should go on for at least another year.

TENNIS

Genial Billy Hinchcliff is as able a coach as the A.A. roster contains, but his material has not been anything to shout about. Ready-made racquet wielders seem to flock to Princeton and Harvard in great droves, but Yale sees very few of them. Perhaps the greatest tennis player to enter Yale since Arnold Jones was Bob Stewart, who captained our Freshman team, but the climate was not congenial to Bob, who was a native of Florida, and he did not stay with us. During the one year that he did play, the Freshmen swept everything from their path, as George Stevens and Ed Mansfield assisted the cause nobly. Jack McMurtry, Ralph Ellis, Bill Greene, Dick Barr, Ed Sullivan, and Tad Jones all disported themselves to advantage on this undefeated array.

In our time—.

Smiled.

Stewart was missing in Sophomore year, but Stevens, Mansfield, and McMurtry carried on from our Class. Stevens was beaten only twice throughout the year and Mansfield once; the team dropped several matches, including the usual one to Harvard. Stevens was appointed captain because of Eggie Miles' ineligibility, and he and Ed played one and two throughout the spring of Junior year. The team was not successful, losing five matches, but George and Ed were as formidable as ever both in singles and doubles, and they reached the final of the New England Intercollegiates, Stevens winning, 6-2, 6-1, 6-0. The same pair lost the final of the doubles championship to Husted and Guibord of Dartmouth. Jack McMurtry played in both singles and doubles throughout this campaign, and Ralph Ellis teamed with him in the doubles against Harvard.

Stevens was reelected captain, and he and southpaw Ed joined forces with the Cantabs in a summer invasion of England which was highly successful—one expects great things from this stalwart combination as their Senior campaign approaches.

LACROSSE

Johnny Warner of Shefftown captained our Freshman team, and the season was partially successful, as we split with Harvard and Princeton, winning from the former and losing to the latter. Four games were chalked up on the winning side of the ledger, and two went into the red. Ned Whitcraft, Alex Thompson, Windy Paine, Gagnon, and Chandlee all had a share in the play.

Served faithfully.

Workout.

The '34 Varsity won three, while dropping five contests—lacrosse in America is completely dominated by teams like Johns Hopkins in the Baltimore-Washington district, and their competition is a little too strenuous for the comparatively inexperienced Elis. Maryland and Mount Washington swamped us by 12-0 and 10-5 scores, and Princeton, Army, and Dartmouth joined in the fun at our expense, although by closer scores. The only satisfaction to be salvaged from an otherwise doleful campaign was a 9-8 win from Harvard.

Last spring Walt Taylor's men had an equally difficult time, as Yale lacrosse continued in the doldrums; the team lost to Harvard, Dartmouth, and Princeton and could only win two games, while dropping six. Johnny Warner was elected to succeed Taylor, and with the above-mentioned group still on hand with added experience, the stick-wielders look forward hopefully to a more fruitful season.

RIFLE

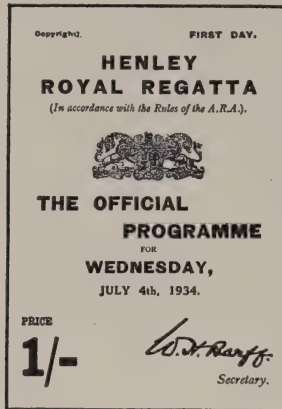

The Blue marksmen were not officially recognized by the A.A. until the season of '34-'35; however, this in no way detracted from their skill, as they won eight out of eleven meets, completely out-shooting Princeton and Harvard. Three members featured from our Class; MacLaren, '36 E., Wadelton, '36 S., and Edwards, '36 E.

150-POUND CREW

Our Freshman lightweights, coached by Don Grant and captained by Hastings Foote, won both their races, beating the Kent seconds and the Harvard 150's, both at the Henley distance. Cutler, Marvel, Robinson, Pearce, Ripley, Schwab, Low, and Foote were the oarsmen and Joe Eggert coxswain.

In 1934 the Varsity fifties won three races in this country, out-rowing M.I.T., Penn, and Columbia, Princeton and Harvard. Dwight Robinson held down the number four spot in the boat in

PUBLICATIONS

THE great event of the year in the publications field was the 100th Birthday of the Yale Literary Magazine. After a full year's work the 1936 board turned out a two-hundred page volume which resembled nothing so much as a contemporary American anthology. Boasting such contributors as Sinclair Lewis, Stephen Vincent Benét, Thornton Wilder, and a host of others, this Centennial Issue was hailed by the critics as a book of great collection value as well as readability, and enjoyed a nation-wide sale. Despite the concentration on the great achievement of a century, the Lit board produced its monthly issues with remarkable regularity and no loss in quality or size.

On unusually friendly terms with "the Old Lady," the comparatively youthful "Oldest College Daily" blustered through an eventful year. Boldly but not recklessly changing a twenty-year-old format, the board succeeded at least in providing a fruitful source of dining hall conversation. With the alumni terrified at the announcement that Yale was 97 per cent radical, the students irate at being told that they were not given enough to do, and the faculty annoyed at various diatribes, the News enjoyed a healthy dislike from many quarters and thus assured notice for its fresher and more human treatment of the news.

Unperturbed by financial worries, the Record board produced a series of issues of unusually high standard and thoroughly enjoyed doing it. The usual accusation of a tendency to plagiarism was this year impossible, and none could take umbrage at the Owl's sly hooting.

Aside from these, the Yale Scientific Magazine impressed the Ac man with its shiny covers, even though his purely cultural tastes might have prevented his venturing further. The Trumbullian carried on nobly, sole survivor in the college publication field.

All told, it was a good year for the printed word.

THE NEWS

On January 21, 1935, a new board came in—not unheralded, for the Associated Press wires were humming with the story that the notoriously staid Yale Daily News had declared an “emphatic farewell to political conservatism” and, what was perhaps more important, to journalistic conservatism.

But the history of the 1936 board does not begin with that day. It goes back to an afternoon in November, 1932, when some three-score bewildered Freshmen gathered in the Briton Hadden Memorial Room to listen to, but not to hear, the speeches of the impressive editors. Of the four great competitions that followed, the tales would fill a volume, and for the 1936 board members the memories of those days will outlast the memories of later power—memories of terrifying interviews, of “last trip,” of fruitless pavement-pounding in New York in search of ads, of grim sessions when the winners were announced, and of the ensuing celebrations. It is unfortunately of the nature of Yale that these pages should glorify only the board and leave unsung the heroes that slaved and never slept and did not “make the News.”

Of the months that followed Jim Newton’s great fight talk against “packing” and the election of officers, the first politically irreproachable one in years, little need here be recorded. They were on the whole dull times, satisfying at first as new and important jobs

Yale Professors Flood Classrooms With Communism

Corrupt Faculty Use Code
In Lectures, "News"
Survey Reveals

SEMINARS SUBVERTED

That Yale professors continually picture the contentment and efficiency of Soviet Russia in contrast to the misery and wastefulness of the United States; that their lecture outlines contain open encouragements to radical thinking; that their spoken remarks are full of thinly veiled references, often in the form of code, to Leftist organizations and policies; and that seminars and reading-periods have been frankly subverted to propagate Socialism, Communism, and other forms of social regeneration are some of the astounding and appalling facts uncovered by the News in its probe into radicalism at Yale.

These revelations were made after a systematic study of lecture notes, term papers, and other documents connected with various courses, and after searching interviews and close observations. Conservatives in and out of the University will find it hard to believe to what an extent subversive doctrines have permeated Yale's whole educational program.

Students Fed Red Figures

Even into such cut and dried courses as Comparative Statistics the hand of Moscow was terrifyingly apparent, as is shown by the following excerpts from lecture notes taken by a student in the course who refused to permit his identity to be divulged: "In Kalamazoo average yearly rainfall is only 10.6 inches; in Irkutsk it is 15.1 inches. Practically no soy beans can be found in the homes of Iowa farmers; homes in eastern U. S. S. R. full of them... Over 500 Chicago farmers have measles annually; measles virtually unknown in Leningrad."

Many lecture outlines appearing on blackboards after classes contained tell-tale phrases. One of the most flagrant, from a course in Twentieth Century Drama, ran as follows: "Influences on the Modern Stage: a. Dampening effect of an unchanged social system. b. Stimulus of struggle. c. Inspiration derived from revolution. d. Liberation by casting out old forms."

Lecturers Veil Remarks

That professors hide their activities under codes and pre-agreed signals was flagrantly confessed. One student in Affairs Abroad said, "It's easy if you know the code, and the dean never gets wise. You see, whenever the prof says, 'Compromise and persuasion,' for example, he really means, 'Revolution and triumph of the proletarian.' If he mentions 'international extradition treaties' or 'Hyde Park,' he is talking about the 'Comintern' and 'Red Square.'"

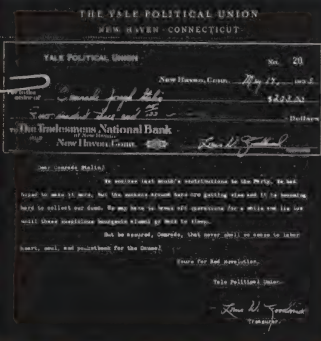

In the final review lecture in the course Graphic Art the professor ended by saying, "Don't be blinded by the Surrealist School, but judge yourself by the standards of Rembrandt and Van Dyck." A tremendous burst of applause followed, and a student leaped over and whispered to the News investigator, "He certainly is right about not believing what Wall Street says and telling us to join in behind the Daily Worker crowd."

Political Union Funds Go to Stalin And Soviet, Seized Letter Shows

What was ostensibly organized as a club to promote interest in political affairs has become a breeding place of radicals and an outpost of the Communist Internationale, the News probe disclosed when it investigated the activities of the Yale Political Union.

Underneath the cloak of an innocent debating organization, Moscow-minded radicals have been working hand in hand with Stalin. Just what happens to members' dues is only too clearly shown by the damning piece of evidence the News discovered in Treasurer Goodkind's desk—a check made out to Comrade Stalin to help the cause. This check and conversations with Union leaders leave no doubt that the Reds hold the whip hand in the house and found little difficulty in forcing through a resolution to support the Internationale financially.

Behind closed doors the Union has organized itself into a miniature version of the Soviet, palpably based on the Russian model, and has elected a Central Executive Committee over which the Liberals, or Lenin men, have a stranglehold. The last two

Fascists Prepared To Wipe Out Reds

Have Opened Fire in Union
As "Tory Independents"

Prompted to the search by an angry communication, the News late last night discovered a small, but violently inclined Fascist organization on the Campus. A meeting was being conducted in complete darkness in the German room in Bingham Hall, the members wearing luminous silver shirts.

Poised perilously on the windmill the News reporter overheard laying of plans for the campaign against the prevalent Communism. In a stirring speech to his men the leader proclaimed that a courageous, well-organized band, no matter how small, could wipe out the faint-hearted Communists. "They are divided among themselves, they do not know what they want," he shouted derisively.

The program outlined called for a general putch in Yale Station at the rush hour, to be followed by a drive for members to join the nation-wide silver-shirt movement. Confidence was expressed that a Coughlin man would soon be pushed into a position of authority in Woodbridge Hall, despite the present solidly Communist administration.

Previous activities of the group, according to the reports delivered, had been limited to a hopeless attempt to combat the overwhelmingly radical Political Union on its own ground. The four Fascists who were able to achieve membership in the Union had carried on their work under the title of Tory Independents, but their resistance to any proposal made had so far proved ineffective.

"Packing 'Em Up—" Professors Tell How

Fighting intrigue with intrigue, the News resorted to the dictaphone method yesterday, when a prominent member of the Anthropology Department went into a huddle with an equally well known Organic Evolutionist. True to expectations, the conversation turned to "packing 'em up for Stalin," and these two Yale professors spent a full hour gloating over their mutual success.

"I didn't land a single recruit for the first six weeks of the Fall term," one said, "until I gave them that spiel"

NEW HAVEN OR MOSCOW!
The "News" camera pictures a typical sovietized room in one of the newer colleges where students live in an atmosphere of revolution and shock brigades. "The Soviets are the revolutionary organs of the Dictatorship of the proletarians," shouts the left hand poster, while from the other, the eager undergraduate learns that "From the Shock Brigades of the Workmen we go to the Workshops and Factories."

Yale Seething With Communism; 73% Red, "News" Probe Shows

Reporter-at-Large
Gets Real "Inside"

"Voice of Pierzon," Co-op,
Cora Colburn Indicted
In Red Intrigue

Not content with having the more obvious forms of Communism in Yale, the News' inquiring reporter yesterday decided to get the real "inside" of the story. What he found was the stamp of Moscow in Professor Tinker's study, the Co-op, Pierzon, and even ultra-conservative Woodbridge Hall.

Filling three and a half shelves, the English teacher's 102 innocent-looking works on Karl Marx put to shame the insignificant three volumes of Dr. Johnson's best. While the files of the Political Union were yielding their incriminating correspondence, the Co-op itself took on a red hue and stripped of all exterior gilt, was revealed as nothing more than an agent of the Amtorg. An invoice for one hundred red socks, consigned by rumor to Malcolm Farmer, was but part of the evidence seized by the raiders.

PBI Spreads Communism

The University laughed tolerantly when radio station PBI, the "Voice of Pierzon," went on the air a week or so ago, but a new light was thrown on the enterprise when the truth was ferreted out—that the station is nothing more or less than an organ of the Communist Youth movement to spread Bolshevik propaganda. When the third degree finally persuaded Comrade Lohmann to undergo Woodbridge Hall's underground activities, sinister indeed appeared the organization of the Yale branch of the party. Not the untutored hand of some Freshman Nihilist, but the sturdy right arm of Food Commissar Cora Colburn was on the hurling end of a bomb recently exploded in Commons. The failure of a similar attempt in Physics laboratory rents with the seven OGPU agents in the ranks of the campus police.

The disappearance of Vincent, the homing pigeon, was also easy to explain on the surface, but little was it known that the bird's messages were coded instructions from Governor

DOCTRINES SPREAD

College-Wide Poll Favors
Revolution—University
Must Take Blame

AWOWALS ARE BOLD

Seventy-three per cent of Yale University is enrolled in the Communist Party!

Ninety-seven per cent thinks Capitalism is doomed!

And of these, ninety-four per cent favors revolution as the means of achieving Communistic ends!

These were some of the startling revelations which came to light yesterday when the News quizzed 3,300 undergraduates, graduate students and Faculty members, in its efforts to ascertain the true extent of Red activity at Yale.

3,300 Answer

Covering the entire University in this three-day survey, the O.C.D. posed five pertinent questions. Of the 3,400 persons approached all but a hundred were willing to answer, with results as follows:

1. Are you an enrolled member of the Communist Party? (Yes, 73%).
- a. If so, were you influenced in your views by what you learned at Yale? (Yes, 100%).
2. What means do you favor to achieve the aims of Communism? (Revolution, 94%, legislation 6%).
3. Do you believe the capitalist system in America is doomed? (Yes, 97%).
4. Do you believe that some form of collectivism is needed in the United States? (Yes, 97%).
5. Were you born in Russia? (Yes, 62%).

One surprising aspect of the investigation was the readiness with which most of the prospects responded. Where the News representatives expected evasion and skepticism, frankness of the most disarming sort greeted the questions.

"This isn't C. C. N. Y." "Sure, I'm a Communist," one Senior responded. "That's why I came to Yale instead of C.C.N.Y. Up here you can find some one who talks your language."

One graduate student was openly cynical. "Just like the News—investigating something that everybody knows."

Others waxed critical of the Yale administration—"Sheer conservatism. They're practically Marxists."

In general, however, the men interviewed were friendly and willing to talk. Only half a dozen suspected the interviewers of prying, or of being stool pigeons. Of these three had good reason to fear, however. They had been exiled from U.S.S.R. two years ago for being too radical.

Instructors Sell Russia

In general those questioned confined their answers to yes or no, but on No. 1a most of them were willing to enlarge. "I was practically a Hooverite until I came here," one said. "Then between Freshman History, Biology 10, and Sophomore English I was completely won over. Now these Yale instructors can sell you Russia."

On questions 3 and 4 there was almost no discussion, as various people interviewed barked such curt answers as "Of course." "Obviously." "Capitalism—what a laugh!" "What do you I was completely won over, for an average man?"

were undertaken, and then quickly irksome because the time was so slow in coming when no more orders would have to be taken. And then at last the time did come, and the intention of leaving "oppressive respectability" behind was expressed and put to the test.

It was not long—two days to be exact—before the new News (almost unconsciously) shocked the public. An editorial advocating what was thought to be a perfectly obvious necessity in a wide-awake institution of learning, courses in Communism and Fascism, was reprinted on the front page of the New York Herald Tribune. Thereafter the News was widely considered "red," and hence, what was more important to the editors, was at least read.

The history of the effort to make the News a newspaper rather than an institution is difficult to set down. Friendly observers noted a new sparkle and imagination in the treatment of news. Many accused the O.C.D. of tabloid tendencies and of attempting cheap journalistic effects. These divergent opinions were but strengthened when, after the spring vacation, the great event of the year for the 1936 board took place: the News appeared in a smaller, six-page standard size. Abandoning a format that had been left unchanged for decades, the editors left only the traditional banner and the type-face the same. With narrower columns, modernized headlines, and a daily sports page, it was thought that the paper was not only easier to handle, but took on a neater, smarter appearance. The front page was cleared of non-essentials, and every effort was made to enliven the style, especially in the headlines. With a back page set aside for news of athletics, the opportunity was seized for feature sports articles, reports "from enemy camps," comments of sports writers, and, during the football season, the amiable first-hand accounts of one "Shoulderpad." The attempt to brighten the paper was reflected in the mounting bills for telegrams and for photo-engraving, much to the dismay of the business office. In the readability of the news, a great factor was the almost unprecedented activity of editors, as well as officers, who took over much of the work hitherto relegated to the heelers and themselves handled almost all the important stories.

Of specific journalistic undertakings, not the least important was the survey of undergraduate opinion on the college courses, published in the spring with a view to helping students make their course choices for the ensuing year. Although such a method of course evaluation was open to obvious criticisms, it was at least representative and was felt to be fairer than the personal critiques of departments offered the year before.

More spectacular was the appearance of an extra after the Harvard football game in Cambridge, complete with picture and play-by-play account of the game. Printed in a Cambridge newspaper office, the first copies, though so scarce as to be very hard to find, reached the Stadium while the crowd was still pouring out. Thus was consummated retaliation for the reputed "scoop" of the News by one F. D. Roosevelt, editor of the Crimson, when an extra appeared in New Haven.

Dynamo.

Probably the journalistic high spot of the year was the "red issue." One Monday in May an editorial announced that the News, under pressure from the alumni, would investigate Communism at Yale, carefully and fearlessly. On Wednesday blaring headlines announced that Yale students were 73 per cent Communists; a facsimile of a letter and check from the Yale Political Union treasurer to Comrade Stalin and a picture of a "typical" student's room plastered with Soviet posters appeared on the front page; the editorial started out in bold-face with the words, "We are appalled!" and sounded a call for all loyal graduates to help stamp out "this red horror." Inconspicuously, the poll also revealed that Yale students were 62 per cent Russian-born; and the picture of the Communist Mass Meeting, on closer inspection, proved to be of Tap Day.—The editors will long remember their delight when it developed that some of the alumni had taken the issue seriously.

More than mere mention is due the work of the various columnists, who gave their services, for the most part, for love. "Bread and Circuses," a column of rare eloquence, commenting with equal perception on University and national affairs, was perhaps the most outstanding feature of the 1936 News, especially from the point of view of older readers. Although generally liberal, its unfavorable remarks on the President's speech to Congress in January, 1936, almost wrecked the News' red reputation, for its author was offered a job by the Republican National Committee. "The Windmill," appearing on alternate days, raised the level of the "funny column" from the anecdotal "Ten-Twenty Topics" to a subtle wit and charm worthy of F.P.A. Perhaps no higher compliment could be paid it than that even its remarkable "reviews of the week" failed to impress the Freshmen. "Down the Field" distinguished itself by sporadic attacks on fellow columns and towards the end of the year, a style of distinctly Winchellian character. The various critics displayed their talents in different ways, "The Play's the Thing" especially in its pithy summaries of the current stage, "Flickers" in its masterly invective (causing the business department no end of embarrassment), and "The Bookshelf" and "Music" in making charming and delightfully readable heretofore unspeakably dull columns. In "Headlines" the high spots in the day's news of the world were digested and interpreted with real insight.

Professional secrets, unknown even to the writer, would be disclosed in a complete history of the business department. Hence suffice it to say that, despite the unusually amiable relations between the upstairs and the downstairs offices, the News made rapid strides out of the depression.

Finally, although to attempt a complete chronological review of the editorial policies of the year would be fruitless, certain aspects may bear mention. In the political field, the News earned a not unjustified reputation for radicalism, but, strangely enough, that reputation was based on early statements of policy and on the fact that Mr. Heywood Broun was the principal speaker at the News ban-quiet; and the actually radical ideas expressed for the purpose of awakening student thought received little or no comment. Attention was drawn to the seemingly insoluble problem of technological unemployment and the impossibility of relief as a permanent solution. Repeated attempts were made to reveal the stupidity of poverty in the midst of plenty, especially in the light of the nation's amazing, but unused, productive capacity. John Strachey's deportation was ridiculed, and his service in opening American eyes to the glaring faults of their system was recognized. Having expressed its determination to flay unthinking conservatism, the News did rant and rave—with no visible effect. One of the most virulent attacks in this direction was made on the opposition of the undergraduates to old-age pensions, revealed in a poll carried on in conjunction with the Herald Tribune. No comment or objection was received when a series of three extremely favorable articles on Russia by two of the editors was published in the fall.

Just as fruitlessly the News stood out for international order, as represented by the League of Nations, and declared its belief that permanent neutrality was impossible. Its stubborn confidence could not be shaken by the events of the Italo-Ethiopian war.

In the University field the editorial efforts, though just as much of a nuisance, met with scarcely greater success. To be sure the recommendations for the Junior Promenade contributed to the latter's renaissance; comprehensive examinations for all were instituted, perhaps independently of the News' long-time support, but the report of which, officially unannounced, was the great "scoop" of the year; shameless publicity for the Yale Political Union and for Piereson College, though much to the annoyance of one Leprechaun, helped keep those institutions alive; with editorial support the fraternities lost only one member; and, after an active campaign, inaugurated by "Bread and Circuses," Mory's lowered the price of ale 5¢.

But a determined advocacy of telephones, heartfelt attacks on courses with unrealized potentialities, and repeated tirades against the A.A., especially for its refusal to publish figures, resulted only in that visionary success of all newspaper men, universal damnation. Similar opprobrium was received from all the liberal publications and most of the college newspapers in the country when the artificially inflated campaign to keep America out of the 1936 Olympics was attacked. A tirade against the "All-American" farce achieved a little attention, but no results, and as yet nothing more can be said for the safe-driving campaign which attracted almost a thousand undergraduates to sign pledges. Unable to persuade the University to establish a public speaking course, the News did so itself, securing the services of Professor Greaves; the publicity which this venture received and its success during the year offered some hope that the authorities might be shamed into undertaking the course again. Of the hundred and one suggestions that were wholly ignored the less said the better.

The success of the 1936 board in achieving its purposes is not to be estimated here. But it may not be presumptuous to say that in its chosen position as the "gadfly on the rump of the University horse," the News did not go unnoticed.

THE YALE LITERARY MAGAZINE

Special Confession

It is not of her great age that those of us who serve the Old Lady today are especially proud. We feel that there has been perhaps too much attention paid to the fact of her one hundred years, and not enough to the reason of it, and to its very real influence on all those with whom she comes in contact. It is said of every one who succeeds by no matter what curious magic in reaching the centenary mark that he or she is able to read fine print without the aid of glasses, takes an active interest in human events, and intends to celebrate the occasion by a parachute jump over the ancestral home. It is generally added that such great age has been attained by one of two means: drinking twenty-four glasses of water a day and total abstinence from all alcoholic beverages; or by absorbing as much brandy or other liquor as the human system is able to contain without the addition of that dangerous element, water.

But all this is not quite important. Even the fact that a centenarian is still enjoying life, and has perhaps even proposed to a member of the church choir, is not quite important. And we who serve the Old Lady cannot help being impatient at those who do not look beyond such petty details, because her physical presence, however hearty and athletic at this late date, has come to be accepted tacitly by us as a part of the apparatus of that companionship we know with her.

It has been true from the first year in which the Lit began its abundant life that those who knew it from without could not help missing the chief importance of its being. It has seemed for the last century a magazine that is published, with a certain naïve and occasionally hysterical irregularity, once a month throughout the college year and is read by a group of men whose total number has varied as greatly as the value of the work published in its pages. The Lit has, even in the public eye, scaled what are referred to in newspaper jargon as the heights; and it has also, in the public eye, wallowed in the deepest of all sloughs of despond. There have been years in which old Elihu Yale peered nearsightedly from a cover that hid a handful of well-wrung pages—and what little public there has been at such a time has had ample and justifiable cause for mockery. There have been years in which our honored Saint seemed a little to straighten on his spavined legs, standing as guardian to scores of pages of a rich worth—and the public then has bestowed its praise like a most liberal and princely giver. But what should be made known is that such public approbation or disapproval, and the evident causes behind it, are essentially the least important part of the Yale Literary Magazine.

Bargain.

We do not any longer gather under the romantic circumstances of a century ago. Too few have left any respect for claret, while oysters are as archaic as the flickering light by which they were lowered into the gaping mouths of the editors. We have lost an immense deal of that sense of close and immediate intimacy with one another that a smaller college, with fewer interests, made possible. Each of us today is able to prove, and frequently does, that every minute of his day from seven o'clock in the morning until one the next morning is carefully allotted for a multitude of tasks whose relative importance none of us has time to question; we are anything but reposeful, we are anything but willing or able to spend long hours before an open fire, discussing the cabbages and kings of our own tomorrows. Now we do this. Now we do that. Oh, and this. And that special work for so-and-so. And when will there be time for that other job? It is impossible to pretend that this absurd centrifugal excitement has not been injurious to the Lit, because the simple element of time alone cannot help but play an important part in the development of friendships one with another, and a higher love for the Old Lady herself, and the myriad secret meanings for which she has stood and will again stand.

But if the Yale of to-day has robbed us of something of what the Lit can mean, we are not yet destitute, we are yet far from what we appear in the eyes of the world. The Lit continues to be as much a name of a certain spirit in the college as it does of that magazine which pro-

ing. It is all too true that the Old Lady would lose much of her worth if she were to be judged by the monthly publication of stories and poems the importance of most of which, in the editorial of the years, is no greater in the eyes of the editors than in the eyes of the discerning public; certainly if this had been true in the past, in those cycles of seven lean years during which there were no full granaries from which to draw, in the *occasional*oods of despair and futility through which the Lit has had to pass; then in such times the Old Lady must have given up her ghost and laid her down with a will. But always there has been a unifying spirit among the editors themselves, a sense of the necessity for her machinery of friendship, that has lifted her above famine or reproof. And has even, what is of more importance, lifted her above prosperity or praise.

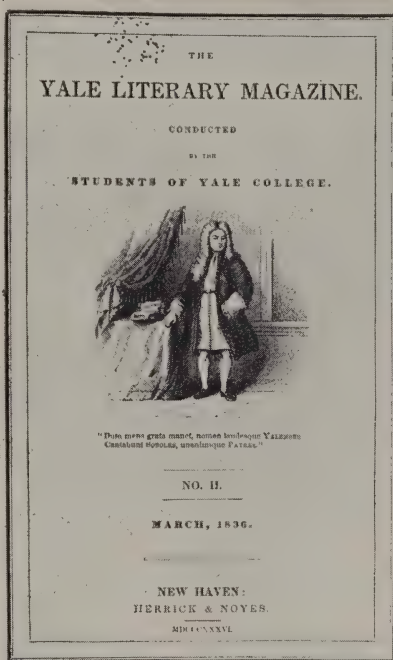

But in the case of the bright particular board of 1936: the major the year has been the production of the Centennial Issue, which was distributed on a nation-wide scale on February 22, with a first printing of over five thousand copies. In this issue were contributions by such famous past editors as Sinclair Lewis, Thornton Wilder, Stephen Vincent Benét, Archibald MacLeish, Walter Millis, William Lyon Phelps, Philip Barry, and others; and contributions as well by the leading undergraduate authors of today, George deMare, James Yost, William K. Cole, Hugh Chisholm, and many more. Naturally the best efforts of the year were directed towards inclusion in this 275-page number of the Lit, and one of the major problems of the editors was the necessity of maintaining a standard of reasonable excellence throughout the normal issues of the year.

The circulation, thanks to the efforts of the business board, under the shining ægis of Harman McBride, reached the highest peak known; the entire financial situation, quitting the red something more than a rosy hue, making possible a great increase in size of each issue and, in so doing, giving a greater opportunity for expression to all those interested in writing. As a result, the 1936 board has been the largest in history; and the number of contributors from the lower classes (so to speak) has been encouragingly large as well.

It has been a year of sturdy growth, a year during which the Lit seems not only to have faintly breathed, but to have taken up its bed upon its back and walked. Certainly, financially as well as editorially, it is more firmly entrenched in the life of Yale than it has been in a deep handful of years; and, with the impetus added by the nation-wide recognition of the hundredth year of its birth, it can look forward with as much assurance as excitement to the singing decades ahead.

First "Elihu" Lit.

The 1936 board is a little fearful lest it seem to have placed a higher premium upon the pachydermatous trait of mere size and quantity than upon the more delicate emphases of sheer quality. We may have seemed Johnsonian rather than Jonsonian—if so literary a comparison will be forgiven, let alone understood. And yet it has seemed to us important to restore the solid flesh and blood of the magazine, giving it new breath and a firmer pulse, and to leave to another year the strengthening of the bones.

BRENDAN M. GILL.

THE RECORD

As Harry "Rosey" Rosenberg often says, "Those who heel the Record do not make business contacts. They do not make money. They aspire to the more ethereal realms. Their work is almost as hacked as the Lit, but they know it."

Money is no God to Record men. It had better not be; their mortgage is large. Their financial status is no longer a mystery. Even outsiders realize that the Record is now going through a most trying period and that board members receive no material remuneration for their services. But it is fun to be on the Record, and during the past few years there has come a steadily mounting growth of cooperation and friendship among the active board members.

Unlike their immediate predecessors, the 1936 Record men sacrilegiously refused to bow to the New Yorker standards as the acme of all humor. Oddly enough, all of the amusing situations do not arise in the Men's Room of the Grand Central Station. The Record's locale is Yale and if its field of activity is more concentrated, its humor is the more natural.

Progress was made towards this goal during the year. Several cover designs by Kent Wightman and center spreads by Dana Noble were exceedingly appropriate. Al Root produced some of the most amusing drivel that the Record has ever had the pleasure of printing.

THE Yale Record

The able theatre criticisms of John Ferguson and witty verse of Norris Hoyt deserve special mention, as do the coöperative efforts of Corwith Hamill, Sturges Ely, and Fred Greene.

Conspicuously absent during the year were the usual publicity stunts. All papers, however, did consider it newsworthy when the cover of the Record's Navy game issue and that of the Athletic Association's official program bore a remarkable resemblance. Much favorable comment was also received for the full-colored reproduction of a Reginald Marsh painting published during the fall. This marked the first time that any college publication had ever attempted such an ambitious feature.

Despite the constant heckling of our classmates, the 1936 Record board has had a good time presiding over the Owl and also has the satisfaction of looking back with a certain pardonable pride upon its efforts.

ago, the Banner and Pot Pourri bought up the rights of the Freshman Year Book with the conviction that they could substantially improve the book and increase its circulation. The Freshman Year Book today is a de luxe edition of the Banner and Pot Pourri, containing all the material in the latter and individual photographs and biographies of the first-year men. As a result the circulation has more than doubled.

The 1936 Yale Banner and Pot Pourri has made some innovations, chief among them the new arrange of views. On the division pages preceding each section of the book are found a new University view having some definite relation to the subject matter of that section on one page and opposite it a sketch, done by a competent art student and consistent in form and subject with the view. The editors hope that thus a new meaning and interest will be imparted to these unusual reproductions of familiar campus scenes.

MUSICAL CLUBS

NEWSPAPERS this coming summer will probably bring you some such story as this: 'Yale Glee Club starts European tour, scoring tremendous success in appearance in Paris.' For that's the schedule in store for the fifty Yale undergraduates gathered here today. These students, under the able leadership of Marshall Bartholomew, were selected from about three hundred who tried for the club. They have been as rigorously weeded out, trained and disciplined, as any football team. Oldest college organization of its kind in America, the Yale Glee Club counts among its alumni such distinguished singers as Charles Kullman of the Metropolitan Opera Company and Lanny Ross, radio and cinema star. It is a great pleasure to have them with us this afternoon."

The announcer is speaking for RCA's Magic Key Hour on February 9, 1936, featuring such luminaries as Ray Noble, Guy Lombardo, Richard Himber, Frank Black, and their orchestras. After the program, comments were: Ray Noble—"You compare favorably with any choral society in England." Guy Lombardo—"This is the best college glee club I have ever heard. I enjoyed immensely being on the same program."

It is fitting that any comment on music of undergraduate Yale should begin with this organization: for in and around the Glee Club revolves most of the extra-curricular activity of the musically inclined student—at least, from the singing point of view.

Clear call.

Four years ago some hundred men, Freshmen of the Class of 1936, turned out for the Freshman Glee Club, little suspecting that among them would be some who, by dint of their later association with the Yale Glee Club, would be given the opportunity of traveling over a goodly part of the globe. And yet these men, by the blending of their not always too melodious voices, were to see most of the Southern part of the United States, seaboard and inland, on two very successful Southern trips by car; a few had gone out to the Middle West Freshman year during Christmas vacation; and many of them were to travel to Europe Senior year for concerts in France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden—a wonderful climax to four years of singing at Yale.

But future pleasures were very dim and hazy when these Freshmen marched tremblingly to their first voice trials (God bless 'em) before Arthur Hall, Barty's able assistant, in Byers Hall in the fall of 1932. Satisfaction and gratification on making the club turned into that cold before-a-voice-trial feeling a few months later when Arthur announced a cut. By this time we were firmly encamped in our new headquarters, 67 Prospect Street, with excellent view of the cemetery, and the season was on.

Roseate pictures of fun and frivolity were invoked when announcements of tentative concerts at St. Margaret's, Westover, Miss Bennett's, and Miss Walker's seminaries had been made by Harry Miller, our enterprising manager. But Hotchkiss, Suffield, and Pomfret suffered instead. P.S.—We did go to St. Margaret's. It was at this crowning triumph that the histrionic abilities of another Miller were brought to light in the shape of a yodel, and soon the girls were gathering. Bailey Brown, leader, complained of distracted female attention, and soon the yodel and company was carried off to be stifled silently in a corner.

Inimitable.

Spring found several first tenors journeying to Smith and Vassar with the Varsity, but these were rare birds. The humble masses stayed close to home, singing on the Old Campus and around an occasional stein at Mory's.

Next year it was our privilege to meet Barty—coach, leader, critic, teacher, chaperon, and friend. Although over one hundred and twenty years old, the Glee Club has enjoyed its period of greatest prosperity during the past decade, due to the efforts, patience, and personality of this man. Barty has made good chorus music an important part of our life here and the singing of it a pleasure to all who have been fortunate enough to work under his guidance.

That fall, with many of us on the Varsity Club, the annual pilgrimage to Cambridge for the Harvard concert became quite an event, and we had our first taste of the big time. The Town Hall affair, with Lanny Ross as headliner, and a broadcast over WICC at Bridgeport completed our pre-Christmas activities. Winter was enlivened by the always pleasant series of concerts and rehearsals with the New York Junior League (Dobbs Ferry and New York). The fact that Barty is the director of this organization has made the affair an annual event and a delightful one.

The Metropolitan District Contest at the Wanamaker Auditorium that year proved our last; for soon afterwards we were admitted into the New England Federation, an organization whose aims and activities are more in keeping with our own singing traditions.

Spring vacation saw the Glee Club take to the road by car for a trip through the Southland—the first jaunt of its kind for a number of years. After sailing to Jacksonville from New York, the tour commenced with concerts at Miami, Palm Beach, and Mountain Lakes. The club, under the mellow influence of Southern skies and hospitality, turned in fine performances of tone and color, and the prestige of the organization was greatly enhanced. Rollins College at Winter Park, Savannah, Ga., Charleston, S. C., Chapel Hill, N. C., Hampton and Richmond, Va., completed the trip, and twenty-six men and a yodeler returned to New Haven well convinced that the spring trip idea was a good one.

Bennington College, College Dining Halls, and finally Woolsey Hall at Commencement echoed long and lustily to our singing—especially the last, because of the presence of Lanny Ross as soloist—and soon we were scattering in June.

"In Junior Year we take our ease, We smoke our pipes and sing our glees." Before the leaves had started to fall we were informed of a concert at Winsted, Conn., where there lived, it was whispered, a certain auburn-haired gentleman of the Glee Club. Then in quick succession, the Harvard concert and a publicity party in New York, "at which Mascot Handsome Dan II and Harvey Hemingway assisted a committee of débutantes in selling ten tickets for the concert. Despite their efforts we filled the Waldorf-Astoria grand ballroom—with music, and the Yale Collegians provided rhythmic noises for the dancing that inevitably followed."

Exploration.

A rather cool trip to Andover in a storm of blizzard proportions in January completely exhausted fifty songsters and the final blow of "we thought the Harvard Glee Club was much better" flattened one and all.

The last day of February was set off by the Yale Club in honor of Fleischmann's Yeast, for we sang a full four minutes over the radio on Rudy Vallée's hour. This was to be the beginning of a series of broadcasts, marking a new step in the evolution of the club.

Then came preparations for a long anticipated event—our second Southern trip during spring vacation. Cold and sleet were left behind as the S.S. "Shawnee" embarked for Jacksonsville one March day, and again the club was off for a series of one-night stands. Southern belles, "green corn," and a beach threatened to overwhelm us that first stop in Florida, but bright and early next morning motors were tuned and the caravan started for Tallahassee and the Florida State College for Women. Thoroughly cowed by two thousand curious feminine stares, our lads meekly ate their dinner and crept cautiously to the auditorium, to be quickly reassured by the storm of applause, hoots, and broken furniture that followed the singing. Nobody could explain our sudden popularity, unless it was the curious conduct of one Pinkham in the first tenor section.

New Orleans and its old-world atmosphere entirely captivated our hearts. Thoughts of Antoine's, with food and drink unsurpassed anywhere, gracious hospitality, numerous fairs and exhibitions, and the Spanish town, lingered long after our return to the Elm City.

Mobile had tennis matches between Tilden, Lott, Vines, and Hunter in store for us and also very beguiling spirits to cheer us after a long, arduous drive.

The next stop was Birmingham, after a rather damp drive through the well-paved roads of Alabama. The loose-live-stock country had resulted in only one injured pig, so we rested on our laurels. A never-to-be-forgotten dance occupied our attention very successfully after we had sung, and sleep was out of the question.

Delusions.

The battle cry of "We are watching and waiting for Hemingway and Noble" went out the next evening at Asheville, but our warriors finally arrived with station wagon and suitcases complete—the latter in a dangerously mildewed condition, however. The concert and dance here were among the best of the trip and enthusiasm ran high on both sides.

Struggle for existence.

It was a rare privilege next day to visit Berea College, Kentucky—an institution for poor mountain boys and girls. All the work of the school is done by the students themselves, and their craftsmanship in laces, furniture, copper plating, etc., was a delight to see. Our part of the program was really incidental; the visit was enhanced by our hostesses who sang for us after the regular concert, in the President's home. The moving beauty of their selections and singing was an unforgettable moment in the history of the trip.

Louisville's mint juleps and jug band were firmly associated in our minds after the stay there, and the famed habitat of our genial "Colonel" Henning became even more so when, with a fanfare of trumpets, a Kentucky Colonelship was bestowed upon Leader George Vaill, and Henry and Norm Howard of piano renown were named "Colonel" and "Admiral," respectively, by order of the Governor, Ruby Laffoon.

The final two runs to Cincinnati and Pittsburgh were accomplished with due dispatch, but the last heard of Noble, Overton, and the station wagon was that they were stranded or lost in Ohio. An eminently successful concert was given at Carnegie Hall in Pittsburgh, and the dance at Cincinnati left little to be desired. The trip was over.

Before continuing one must mention the services of the Howard twins, '34, and Basil D. Henning, '32. To them most of the credit for a very successful tour must go. Their rendering of "Yankee General," "Boating Song," and "Antoinette Burby" became almost a Yale tradition by virtue of this and other occasions, and their contributions must be included in any account of the Class of 1936.

Joint concerts with Smith, Vassar, and Mount Holyoke finished off an exceedingly full, but very pleasant and enjoyable year of singing.

Fall of Senior year was to prove even more strenuous. Hardly had football season commenced, when the call came to broadcast with Paul Whiteman, Helen Jepson, Ernest Hutchison, and others over an all-star program on WEAf. We were to sing a few college songs—football medleys, etc. Needless to say, we were more than a bit nervous, but after a shaky start reached our full stride and ended triumphantly with a loud "Bulldog, Eli Yale."

An interlude to Patchogue, Long Island, and the Yale Club in New York was the schedule for a week-end during November. Patchogue was extremely hospitable and turned out an audience of almost eight hundred to hear us sing and to observe Prof Henning perform.

The Harvard concert was away, and then, after an absence of six years, the Princeton Glee Club returned to New Haven the night before the game for a joint program.

Unfortunately, a planned Christmas tour through the Middle West was called off because alumni groups could not raise sufficient financial guarantees. This did not dampen our hopes, for the European trip was a tempting prize no matter how far away.

The annual Junior League concerts reached a new high in excellence, with the singing of such difficult numbers as

Club Marx.

Purist.

Randall Thompson's "Americana" and a Basque folk song, "Upon the Mountain Tops."

The club's name once more came to the limelight when we broadcast on February 9 and February 21, 1936—the former occasion was RCA Magic Key Hour, mentioned at the beginning of the article; the latter, Yale's Alumni Day program, with speeches by President Angell, former Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, a graduate quartet, and Lanny Ross and Ben Cutler.

It is hard to emphasize too strongly the immense change this sort of singing meant for the club. When one realizes that more people heard the Yale Glee Club in one broadcast than in the whole one hundred and twenty years of its history, the true scope of radio's influence dawns on the mind. We have been the first college glee club in the country to broadcast so consistently over national hook-ups. And it is fitting that, just as the Yale Glee Club is the oldest organization of its kind, it has been the first to start on such a new and unblazed trail of future possibilities.

A history of the music of any class should never be completed, or perhaps started, without mention of the Whiffenpoofs, erstwhile gallivanders of Mory's and songsters of rare stamp. For some twenty odd years they have entertained diners with old college airs and blares and this year, as in other years, they have wandered on pleasant evenings into College quadrangles and the Old Campus to serenade "neath the Elms." The names this year on the tables are: Miller, Pinkham, Cates, Case, Knapp, Barr, Mills, McKnight, Robinson, Byers, Pearce, and Holmes, with the Howard Twins and Henning in an honored position. The Whiffs have been quite active, traveling almost as much as the Glee Club. Four of us went to Buffalo and Cleveland, which brought the observation that the quartet business was coming back. Jaunts to the Finch School in New York, Sarah Lawrence, and Rosemary Hall, alumni meetings in Waterbury, Providence, Bridgeport, and Rochester, have all been part of the curriculum. The "gentlemen songsters" have been bound together not only as friends but by their love of music, and this association has proven perhaps the pleasantest experience in college life.

In the instrumental department of Yale music, the Band, ably led by John C. Graham and directed by genial Charlie Smith, has more than upheld the University's honor at every football game and at several rallies. The Band was tremendously improved over previous years and no small part of it was due to its leader. Consisting of seventy-two pieces, including a glockenspiel and bagpipes, the band accompanied the team to Philadelphia, October 12 and to Boston on November 23.

During the winter months a chosen portion of the football group played at intercollegiate hockey games. And at Christmas time, the customary performance of carols took place on the Old Campus and in the courts of the residential Colleges. There were several broadcasts: one, on the eve of the Yale-Harvard game in Boston; another, the Alumni broadcast in Woolsey Hall. Harmonious in appearance and effect, the Yale Band is an important unit in the college's musical life.

Known as the Yale Collegians, the Yale Dance Orchestra has expanded rapidly over the past few years and has had engagements at schools and colleges, dances, etc., over entire New England. It is another organization that has its place in musical Yale.

To give an account of all the other varied informal activities that have grown up with the New Yale would take too many pages. But suffice it to say, that Glee Club, recitals, Gilbert and Sullivan clubs, and orchestras are part of the daily fare in every college. Timothy Dwight has organized a very fine Glee Club of its own under the ægis of James Grafton Rogers, its musical Master. Jonathan Edwards will produce "Ruddigore" this spring. Pierson is to give "Trial by Jury" and has a double quartet that has sung on the radio. Davenport is treated three or four times a year to recitals by Bruce Simonds, and so the list goes.

These growing organizations of informal musical groups are a very healthy sign of a renewed interest in an art that has too often been neglected by the college students.

With this résumé of Yale's music, and with promise for the continuation of the good work of Glee Club, Band, orchestra, et al., we come to the saddest time of all when we actually do "bid old Yale farewell." College Plans may come and go, buildings may rise and be torn down, but Yale songs and music will never die. And to us who have had the privilege of partaking in such activity, they will ever remain dear. The thrill of voices raised loud in song, of men marching beneath Freshmen windows, will long live in our memories.

DRAMATICS

THE door of the Yale Dramat is one of the hardest things for the Freshman to find in those early days of getting used to undecipherable Gothic lettering over arches and, "Where is the Co-op?" and "Why is the Library?"

Nonetheless, a good number of us found it and were suitably rewarded by a try-out from jovial Alec Dean. Came the first play which proved to be nothing more than a revival of the production of the preceding spring, A. A. Milne's "The Perfect Alibi." Two men had dropped out, which gave an opportunity for Sweet and Ripley to chalk up two performances for 1936. Word of an hilarious tour to Albany with the play having got around, the competitors for the next show, "The Private Secretary," were numerous. Chisholm and Alsop were selected for this one, which subsequently found its way down to Bridgeport, not half so much fun as Albany.

The real "gala" of the season, however, was the production, in March, of "Brown of Harvard." Harvard threatened to break up the show, the whole Yale crew was on stage in readiness, and Pratt and Chisholm as the fair heroines of the occasion quite took the eyes of all.

It was during this year, I think, that the idea of producing one-act plays written by the students and acted and directed by them was developed. Sophomore year the plan was put into operation and numerous one-acts were given, among them "The Phantom of the

with this play that the Dramat came under the guidance of Halstead Welles, who has done so much during these years to revive it and perfect its standards. Hal threw all of his energy and enthusiasm into the work, with the result that the plays given that year and the following ones have been in each case noteworthy and highly successful shows.

Ivories," by Doug Auchincloss and Hugh Chisholm, as well as one about the marrying Mdivanis in which Kerr made his initial appearance, while Heckscher appeared in the second of his rôles, as one of a series of strangely-wigged landladies. The first production of Sophomore year was a revival of "Much Ado About Nothing," in which Alsop took part, as well as Bodholt, Hartshorne, Warrington, and Atherton, who were by this time working nobly and furiously in the production department. It was Dramatic fever.

Molnar's "The Swan," given with Vassar, was a somewhat difficult play to do, aggravated perhaps by the difficulties and excitements attendant on going to Vassar for rehearsals. Ripley was the only member of '36 in this one in contrast to Bulgakov's "In the Days of the Turbins," which, besides Miss Blanche Yurka, had about a quarter of the Class in it as soldiers or cadets or bandits.

"Two Gentlemen of Verona," the Commencement production, was a gay and blithesome affair, starring Chester Kerr and Dick Rossbach, a couple of as pretty young Renaissance bloods as you'd care to see. Merrill Knapp, too, made his first appearance, playing host to Lanny Ross, '28, and Handsome Dan II.

The Dramat started things off with a bang in Junior year by producing Jules Verne's "Around the World in Eighty Days." Dillon Ripley as "Phileas Fogg" and Hugh Chisholm as "Passepartout," his valet, scampered as fast as their Gay Nineties dignity would allow them through an endless series of adventures in front of Wilson Ware's gaily painted scenery. The scrambling for rôles was terrific, but Merrill Knapp finally won out from Chester Kerr by a narrow margin, Kaleidoscope.

Merrill's record being seven different parts all in the one play. "Eighty Days" was taken on a triumphal tour of several cities, all of which helped to occupy the time quite well until the winter came 'round. This time it was "Yellow Jack," by Sidney Howard. Rufus Wesson and his men having erected a truly magnificent set, the forceful and determined acting of Stewart Alsop and Dick Rossbach, as well as the character parts of Kerr, Knapp, and Ripley, helped to make of this one of the most successful of the Dramat's efforts.

"The power..."

With the close of this play the reins of office were officially handed over to our Class. Merrill Knapp came in as president, with John Dalrymple as business manager. For the first play, our executive board chose Euripides' "Hippolytus," given during Commencement. The playing of Miss Selena Royle, the decidedly original production planned by Director Welles, and the enthusiastic support of a large and varied group of undergraduate acting talent combined to make this a most successful and highly-applauded first venture.

One incident alone marred an otherwise perfect series of three performances when one of the chorus (I suspect Dwight Robinson) during his occasional venturing into the front rows of the audience (Ah, this modern drama!) happened to sit down in an empty seat reserved for him in the first row, only to discover that not only was he sitting next to the Governor of Connecticut, but also that he had just sat on that gentleman's straw hat.

Acting!

For the fall production a mystery play was decided upon, the final choice being "The Whispering Gallery." Whitelaw Reid's program of publicity resulted in the spreading of forbidding looking posters, a dripping blood-red hand upon a white field, all over New Haven and its environs. The large audiences which resulted were certainly not disappointed by either the extremely effective set of Wils Ware or the fine acting, notably that of Dick Rossbach and Henry Barkhausen.

"God save the King."

Now winter has come again and with it the last production of our board. For this one we decided on "Wings Over Europe," recently put on by the Theatre Guild. The play was an interesting one to do, close-knit in form, the tenseness of its situations affording several excellent opportunities for acting. Contrary to the usual type of Cabinet Table setting, a set with several small tables was used, thus allowing the actors greater freedom of movement. Chisholm as the young man, confronted, with a fine, "brave new world" attitude, the suave old cabinet ministers of Ripley, Knapp, Alsop, Pratt, Mallinson, and Meade. "Wings Over Europe" was indeed a fortunate choice, for it suited individual talents well and gave most of our graduating members a chance for one last fling on the boards.

This last year has been for the Dramat in many ways a year of consolidation, of rounding out of past gains and past plans. In this sense it has been a most auspicious year, for it is seldom indeed that an organization which suffers as the Dramat does from the annual shifting of officers, is able to formulate a long-term system of planning. Throughout the year it has been the policy of the director, the president, and the board to try to put into effective operation many of the suggestions of recent years in regard to organization and departmental work, at the same time maintaining the association's policy of a balanced program of plays.

Some examples of this work have been: the expansion of the subscription plan, inaugurated last year, to include student as well as patroness subscriptions, the putting into operation of the new election requirements, and the continuation of both the Freshman and Junior Varsity, so-called, acting groups. The Freshman Dramat gave a play again this year, their choice being "Journey's End." Different casts were used in each act, and the directors, one to an act, were Chisholm, Alsop, and Ripley. Perhaps the most important innovation of all, this year, has been the institution of a budgeting system designed to es-establish a definite fund to take care of the initial outlays in future productions.

Any effort at evaluation of this year's work is perhaps futile from so close a stand, but at the same time it is only right to affirm, and affirm stoutly, several facts which have tended to make this year a good one for the Dramat. The leadership of President Knapp has been all that could be desired. Faced with the difficult task of running both the Glee Club and the Dramatic Association, he has succeeded nobly in both undertakings. Again the effort this year to give a more long-range aspect to the policies of the Dramat has been a definite step in the right direction and one that those who follow after would do well to bear in mind. The destructive effect of a short-sighted policy, particularly with reference to budget questions, cannot be overemphasized. Lastly the splendid work of Halstead Welles, his enthusiasm and inexhaustible supply of ideas, have more than ever demonstrated his value to the Dramat. We of 1936, then, in handing over the reins to those who will follow after do so with a peculiar sense of the pleasure and the profit which we have obtained from working in the organization, a sense, moreover, which we cannot help mingling with a hope that, as the years go on, the high standards and the devotion which have gone into the making of the Dramat may continue to raise it well on towards that pinnacle of perfection for which it strives.

DEBATING

WHERE Berkeley College nowadays doffs its mitre and steps gracefully aside to let the visitor have an unobstructed view of the Library, Lampson Lyceum, stubborn and imperturbable, formerly stood. To this Lampson, in the far-off autumn of 1932, some forty Freshmen came eagerly to try their fortune at debating. There Mr. Adams, in whom many of us were to find the best that Yale offers, introduced himself to us as our coach and mentor. Bill Hull, as a Junior already famous for the force and wit of his arguments, introduced himself as Mr. Adams' assistant. So filled were we with enthusiasm that day, we organized a Forensic Forum without further ado, determined to meet once a week for the discussion of weighty subjects. A fortunate lapse of memory saves me at this point from relating for how many weeks we did actually meet; but I am certain that what there was of debate was fiery and that the gradual decline of the organization was due less to a want of enthusiasm than to an early infection of that "busyness" which has harried so many of us through all our years here. (It may be noted, however, that some two years later, more grandly attired but with much the same leadership, this Forum was to reappear under the guise of the Yale Political Union!)

The fledglings were ready in any case to try their voices in other

many good statesmen before them. At Choate, in the great days following Roosevelt's inaugural, a Yale team consisting of McCann, Phinney, and Heckscher were able to vindicate democracy by pointing to what miracles had just been wrought through the free expression of a people's will.

The Yale-Harvard-Princeton triangular debate, climax of the season, was on the respective merits of a capitalist and socialist system. To Harvard journeyed conservatives Kerr, Dennis, and Harris; at Yale, meanwhile, Pratt, Bingham, and Heckscher displayed for the first time that "dangerous radicalism," which was destined, before they were through, to give the alumni some uneasy moments.

No account of the year would be complete without mentioning the tireless and stimulating coaching which Mr. Driver, then a visitor from England, gave us in this and other debates. His zest, his brilliance in argument, his lust for the opposition's blood, showed many of us more halls than this dark Lampson. Soon Pratt, Heller, Kelsey, and Bingham invaded Vassar to discuss Mr. Hoover's services to the nation; Long, Auchincloss, and Thomas traveled to the distant realms of the Southside High School. In Washington, D.C., Dennis, Heckscher, and Wickham were royally received by Georgetown University, despite such minor inconveniences as a taxi which ran out of gas as it left the station and a question for debate which turned up on the program in a different form from that for which the Yale speakers were prepared. The cause of Free Trade was their downfall, as it has been the downfall of before the New Deal, under the impact of the Supreme Court and a revived Republican party, had begun to lose some of its shine, Bingham and Heckscher upheld the NRA; Heckscher, in a debate against a team from Oxford, insisted later, as he is ready to insist to this day, that the world is not going to the dogs. Bingham won the Buck Prize, awarded to the best orator in the Sophomore Class, with a speech entitled, "Enlightened Materialism." In the trials for the debate with Harvard and Princeton, Heckscher won a first Thacher Prize, Pratt a second; and the two went down subsequently to Princeton where, before a wildly enthusiastic audience of six, in the hall where Woodrow Wilson had won his undergraduate laurels, they persuaded the judges that a national police force ought to be created.

Heckscher was elected manager of the debating team in the spring; Kerr was reelected publicity manager.

When the Congressional elections approached in the autumn of 1934, a crowd of record size gathered in the Sterling Law Auditorium to hear Bingham and Clark urge a vote of confidence in President Roosevelt; at Harvard Straus and Rostow urged an opposite course. Heckscher met Oxford in a discussion of trade unions organized on a national basis; and although he admitted to the au-clearly than we had realized before what rewards and excitements debating can hold.

At the debating banquet that spring, Heckscher was elected secretary of the Association; Bingham, assistant manager; and Kerr, publicity manager.

dience "off the record" that he was crazy, he upheld, in the face of a team from Stanford, the proposition that cynicism is a wise way of life. Raymond went to New York to convince a Columbia team that the manufacture of munitions should be in Government hands.

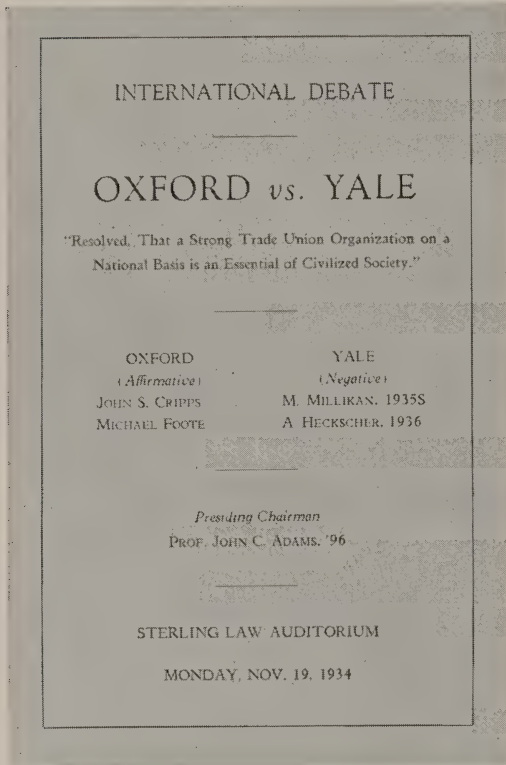

Bingham was second in the TenEyck oratorical competition of the Junior Class; Heckscher, pointing out the dangers in Yale's attitude of blind conservatism, was first. He was elected president of the Debating Association at the annual banquet in the spring. Kerr was elected member-at-large.

With the coming-in of autumn, 1935, the Seniors settled down to enjoy life seriously under the elms of the campus, so that an increasing number of lower classmen was found on the teams which made their way through the New England countryside, arguing mostly the paramount question of whether Franklin D. Roosevelt, slipping in his popularity but still smiling, was entitled to reelection. Clark did, however, find time to support the President against the charges of a Dartmouth team; at Waterbury, against Harvard this time, Raymond stood in his defense once more; and McNamee was among those who assailed his record at Meriden.

In December, before a distinguished audience presided over by President Angell, Yale met a Cambridge team to answer the characteristically English charge that a written constitution is a hindrance rather than a safeguard to social progress. Bingham and Heckscher, who had on occasion shown some impatience with the tortuous reasoning by which our national law is interpreted, were nevertheless ready, when put to the test, to stand up for "the greatest document ever framed by the hand of man." At this writing, I must add, there has come no word of England's decision to follow the course so brilliantly justified that night!

Still in the cards is a debate at Lafayette in which McNamee and Heller will take part and one at Williams in which Kerr and Heckscher will argue Stevenson's famous proposition: "That to travel hopefully is a better thing than to arrive." In the spring, finally, after Raymond and Clark have made an argumentative journey through the South, there will be the last Yale-Harvard-Princeton triangular debate, tentatively set for a discussion of neutrality legislation. So will come to an end what is undoubtedly the most glorious chapter in Yale debating that has been written during the last year or two.

This history, however, cannot come to an end without my saying a word in appreciation of what Mr. Adams has done for us in these years. At luncheon, this noon of winter, I told him jokingly that he must take a seat on the floor of the Union one Wednesday night and flavor the debate by pouring scorn upon the opposition. He said quite simply, "I don't know how to be scornful." That is the truth; and those of us who have been fortunate enough to work with him, have learned more, I think, than mere skill in debating and the nice uses of words. We have learned, if our hearts have been open to the lesson written plain in all his deeds and in the disposition of his mind, the wisdom of tolerance and patience and magnanimity. Mr. Adams cannot often be persuaded to make a speech: recalling how Cornelia, mother of the Gracii, pointed to her sons when she had been asked to display her jewels, he will point to those whom he has coached through long seasons of debating. "These are my speeches," he will say. Well, perhaps it is best so; for although we can ill spare what tales he might recall from the rich funds of his experience, it is sure that his modesty would allow no good to be said for himself if he were not willing to yield us the floor!

AUGUST HECKSCHER, 2D.

THE YALE POLITICAL UNION

IN the spring of our Sophomore year a small group might have been seen coming together once or twice a week to have luncheon in Jonathan Edwards with Mr. Griswold. To one who overheard the conversations, there would have come the report of strange, ambitious schemes for founding at Yale a debating Union modeled on the famous institutions at Oxford and Cambridge. The time, it seemed, was ripe for the adventure. In the classrooms, in the pages of undergraduate journals, in those sessions where the best of college hours are "wasted" in idle talk, a new interest in public affairs, a new awareness of the round world beyond our gates, seemed to be dawning. Yale was emerging from her parochial seclusion; and we asked ourselves, therefore, whether there might not be place, even upon a landscape so crowded with extra-curricular activities as our own, for an organization that would give expression to these nascent forces.

The group which was ready to work towards this end had expanded by the autumn of 1934. The plans had become more definite. Committees were appointed to draw up a constitution, to sound out prospective members, to find a hall where the illusion of a parliamentary body might be created. This last problem was in many ways the most troubling of all we faced: a senate chamber, with the traditional galleries and coatrooms, is an elusive thing to be in search of! I do not think, however, that any of those who were present at one of the early organization meetings will forget the impression caused by the announcement that the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity was taking in no new members that autumn and that its hall might be the one to borrow for our meetings. Was this a portent? Were the changes in the social life at Yale, intensified by the success of the College Plan, creating a new order in which political debate would ring through the walls that formerly had echoed with the faint muttering of fraternity rites?

Great expectations.

On December 3 a banquet was given in Jonathan Edwards to celebrate officially the founding of the Union. It served as a significant introduction to the work ahead. To the forty charter members gathered there, including many representatives of the faculty, Mr. Griswold spoke movingly of the necessity for Yale men to master the technique of democratic government. "You are going to have the pleasure of paying the new taxes that Huey Long is busy thinking up," he said, "unless you can learn to give him measure for measure." He described the opportunities for an organization at Yale that would be for its members "chapter one in careers which should end, not in some Senior honor society, but in the Senate of the United States." Mr.

Formality.

Adams, whose wise and patient coaching of debating had kept an interest in public speaking alive through the lean years when it might otherwise have died out entirely, now gave the Union his generous blessing. Mr. Spykman reaffirmed his enthusiasm and support: "You are, therefore," he had written in his introduction to the Union's prospectus, "making a contribution of the highest significance to the life of our University, and if your success is at all comparable to your great models you will be doing a service to the nation."

The first public meeting was held in the A Δ house on January 28. President Roosevelt, among a large number of men prominent in public life, sent the Union his best wishes. "I'm for it," Huey Long had wired—for this was in the days when Huey's star was in its dangerous ascent; "I'm for it if it's for me." A hundred and fifty members were on the floor that night, and in the crowded galleries could be seen the masters and University officials who had from its inception given the Union their whole-hearted support. President Angell opened the meeting—"though apparently," he said as a photographer's bulb exploded near-by, "at imminent danger to my life." Afterwards the bill, demanding a balanced budget, was introduced by Spitzer; Bingham and Heckscher, who had stood together through many a debate, led the opposition and were supported by Mr. George Soule, editor of the New Republic, who had accepted an invitation to be the main speaker of the evening. When the debate, enlivened by fiery speeches from the radical wing, was finally concluded, it was found that the bill had been rejected by the House. President Roosevelt had been sustained. Yale had decided that the relief of fifteen million unemployed was more important than a budget, however nicely balanced.

Through the following months, into the late spring, the Union held regular meetings. The technique of parliamentary procedure was slowly learned; the parties—Liberals led by Bingham, Conservatives by Barkhausen, radicals by Nichols—developed a sharp rivalry; and caucuses became the scene of many an intense and prolonged wrangle. This was the winter when President Roosevelt was urging radical control of the utilities; the Union debated the issue; and later in the year, when an increasing delicacy in the European situation had turned men's thoughts to war, the Union, led by Mr. Coudert and Mr. Borchard, debated the possibility of effective neutrality legislation. The wits of the Union were able to show their skill in arguing whether Tammany is a "good thing."

At a meeting for private business in the spring, after the qualifications of the candidates for office had been set forth in terms of appropriate extravagance, Heckscher was elected president for the ensuing year, C. S. Woolsey was elected vice-president, Goodkind, treasurer.

The new officers were faced immediately with the problem of quarters for the Union. Numerous organizations were clamoring to have the A Δ house, by now in possession of the University; and there was much question whether so youthful an enterprise dared attempt to raise the funds which rent and maintenance made necessary. By the fall of 1935, however, it could be announced that with the help of alumni the Union had gained entire control over the A Δ house for a year and that within this building would be centralized all those activities which had a common purpose—the Debating Association, the News course in public speaking, the Freshman Forensic Forum, etc.

Thus happily situated, the Union entered upon its second session. The approaching Presidential campaign dominated the political scene, and the first bill introduced was one urging a return to Republicanism. This was defeated; but the Radicals, joining forces in a surprise move with the Conservatives, succeeded in passing a second resolution of non-confidence in the President. "A plague on all parties voted by Yale Union" was the way the headlines of next morning's Herald Tribune summed up the debate. A "Soak the Rich" tax bill was defeated by the efforts of the Conservative party, which, under Reid's vigorous leadership, had invited Mr. Arthur Ballantine, formerly Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to speak for its cause. Russia, by a narrow margin, escaped being deplored; and Heckscher came down from the presidential chair to lead the House in viewing the Liberty League with no inconsiderable alarm. Mr. Arnold, professor of law, persuaded the House that Federal centralization was, in spite of the Supreme Court, a wholesome tendency. And within the very week when I write, with the new president, John W. Field, in the chair for the first time, we heard

Mr. Cecil Driver, in a speech memorable for the force of its argument and the elevation of its style, carry the motion that England's foreign policy has been in the interests of world peace.

On the floor of the House, meanwhile, a number of able undergraduate speakers have been developed. A visitor dropping in to the gallery some Wednesday night during the last winter would have been like to hear, among those from the Class of '36, Jack Bingham with cool logic point out an inconsistency in the opposition's argument; or C. S. Woolsey, now parodying with inimitable humor some Southern statesman, now pointing gravely to the tangled lines of a graph which no mortal could possibly decipher. The visitor might have arrived to hear W. W. Rostow in a few sentences dispel miraculously the darkness and confusion that had descended over the debate; or E. A. Raymond, polished and persuasive; or T. D. Woolsey this time, ready with some droll suggestion or some apt amendment to the bill. Were he fortunate enough, the visitor might have come in to find Moore in one of his brief, electric speeches, perhaps taking his coat off, like the Irishman he is, to enter more deeply into the fray.

We cannot tell now what the future of the Union will be: whether it will become rooted in Yale tradition, or fade after some little time, to be remembered only as a passing phenomenon of the middle thirties, born of political unrest and supported by no more than the transient enthusiasm of a few classes. There are some I know who hope very earnestly that the Union will not fade. But of this much the Class of '36 can at least be sure: it has shared in a gay adventure, and left to those who follow an example of what can be done.

End of an era.

AUGUST HECKSCHER, 2D.

Religion

RELIGIOUS ACTIVITIES

MEMORIES of one's first few days at college invariably center around personalities. In Freshman year one must somehow guide one's course through the maze of human individuals stamped with everything from haughty Seniorhood to the officiousness of second-hand clothes dealers. No wonder that impressions made by people on our entrance into Yale took predominance over others and have remained unmarred for longer time. So it has been with Dwight Hall. Whatever the reason for becoming associated with it, our memories of it in Freshman year are largely of persons and their influence on us. There was the initial Old Mill meeting, of course, when some one hundred or more of our Class joined with upperclassmen in sports, fun, and feed during the opening week of classes. Hard to forget also are the small discussion groups which convened at the Old Mill and in Dwight Hall under the guidance of one well versed in argument, Steve Walke, '34. The forums led by President Angell and William Lyon Phelps were highlight features of the year, as was also a Thanksgiving day party in which the professor took an active part. He made Vachel Lindsay and Robert Frost live for those who attended this party, no doubt rivaling Lindsay himself in his recitation of the latter's poetry. Best remembered of all these Dwight Hall friends, however, was Brank Fulton, the Freshman secretary that year. This genial personality was as ready to engage in a pillow fight after a musicale on Saturday night as he was to plumb the resources of personal religion in a Thursday night discussion group.

Through Dwight Hall numbers of boys in Freshman year began to help with the educational and recreational work at the Boys' Club and the Yale Hope Mission; at the gospel services at the Yale Hope Mission occasionally a Freshman would speak. Likewise, many had the experience of going on week-end deputations to near-by churches. The midwinter Northfield conference which came in February offered opportunity to mingle religion with the good fun that accompanies skiing, sleigh riding, and tobogganing in mixed company. If any have recollection of the more serious aspects of the conference they will recall Visser 't Hooft's discussion of youth movements and Pitt VanDusen's almost ex cathedra claim that nations no less than individuals are subject to moral law and judgment.

Sophomore year found in our Class many who were eager and ready to become full-fledged members of the Dwight Hall Cabinet. Our horizons widened, especially as we came to know more intimately the leaders with whom we were privileged to work. It was then Sid Lovett's second year as University chaplain and a few of us were beginning to recognize in him a real friend and counselor. There were no bounds to his interest and coöperation in the work of Dwight Hall. Fay Campbell, the secretary of Dwight Hall, was one whose advice was sought and cherished and whose life gave concrete proof of the fact that religion to be true must permeate the whole of a man's being and activities.

This second year of ours at Yale saw Dwight Hall engage in the usual activities: Old Mill meetings, calling on Freshmen, Boys' Club and Yale Hope Mission work, etc. But it also had its marks of distinction. Forums were conducted by Professors Mendell, Rudin, and Torrey, who talked on religion and education, Germany, and Russia. Attractive to many who ordinarily did not invade the precincts of Dwight Hall, were a series of group meetings led by members of the faculty. Professors Urban, Macintosh, and Northrop took turns in the presentation of their own views by way of introducing a subject for discussion. Argument was order for the day when the validity and provability of values came up for discussion. As a sort of climax to group activities within Dwight Hall came the World's Student Christian Federation banquet. Dr. Fosdick was the principal speaker at this banquet in honor of foreign students in New England. In his own inimitable way Dr. Fosdick called war and the war spirit before the tribunal of reason and religion, to their condemnation.

By Junior year the members of our Class in Dwight Hall were beginning to feel the responsibility they had for underclassmen. In the first place, under the guidance and leadership of P. E. Jacob, then the Association president, Dwight Hall effected a slight reorganization involving a clarification of the demands which might be made upon its members. It was determined that participation in regular Dwight Hall activities of one kind or another and an acceptance of the purpose of Dwight Hall as set forth in a short declaration constituted the two qualifications for membership. The organizational aspect of the work received additional stress as Jacob paid special attention to the formation of his committees. Monthly Cabinet meetings brought us together regularly for discussion and fellowship.

Spirituality.

Warm exterior.

From our Class came the suggestion that we hold in Dwight Hall several tea dances for Freshmen, similar to the many College dances for upperclassmen. On week-ends Dwight Hall became a veritable college for Freshmen, and there can be no doubt but that its usefulness to Freshmen has increased immeasurably since the advent of the College Plan, which excludes the innocent neophytes.

Mention of the College Plan brings up one of the most recent problems in the religious program, namely, that of integrating it somehow with the several Colleges. Our Junior year witnessed more forums in the Colleges sponsored by the Christian Association and led by men prominent in the religious field. Dr. VanDusen of Union Seminary had addressed a group of students gathered in the Trumbull College Common Room the year preceding this, and his talk was but a starter. In our Junior year also a recognized board of preachers was established, so that each College in this way came to have an affiliation with some Christian leader. Such men as Drs. Reinhold Niebuhr, Coffin, and Tittle before the year was up had met groups in their respective Colleges.

Before the close of our Junior year our Class took over the reins, both in Dwight Hall and the Church of Christ in Yale University. The 1936 Dwight Hall officers were elected as follows: William N. Lovell, president, David E. Swift and Robert B. Birge, vice-presidents, F. Allen Sherk, secretary, and William E. Swift, Jr., treasurer. Likewise, the Board of Deacons was elected to carry on the duties in Battell Chapel: B. C. Rankin, chairman, A. M. Rankin, vice-chairman, D. H. Northrup, secretary-treasurer, and W. Burlingame, Jr., J. M. Cates, T. W. Hall, Jr., J. R. Hersey, G. H. Hogle, J. M. Knapp, W. N. Lovell, J. T. Ryerson, Jr., S. E. Sweet, Jr., D. E. Swift, S. J. C. Townsend, A. L. Trull, L. Walker, and J. H. White. Their régime in Sunday Chapel service was marked by determined decorum and the dropping of a collection plate.

Dictator.

Concerning the work of Dwight Hall this year two facts stand out. First, Fay Campbell is back with us again after a year abroad in Europe, and second, the present Freshman Class, the Class of 1939, is evincing more interest in religion than any other class we have had the occasion to observe here at Yale.

Encouraging indeed has been the increased support which members of the Freshman Class have given to the devotional and religious aspects of the work of Dwight Hall and the Church of Christ in Popular religion.

Yale University. Along with Chapel innovations, attendance at both morning and vesper services has been more than double the customary handful or so of the past few years.

Haggard executive.

Significant among the Chapel innovations has been the introduction this year of a weekly service conducted by the Masters of the various Colleges. During the winter months the Friday vesper services were devoted to the individual Colleges, so that each College might have one service for which it could be responsible and in which its students could take particular interest. It is hoped that this will strengthen the bond between the Colleges and the religious forces on the campus. On Monday and Wednesday afternoons speakers from outside, as well as from the University faculty, have delivered addresses. The services on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons were more of a purely devotional nature.

If the Colleges have come to Dwight Hall to worship, Dwight Hall has gone to them to help start discussion about religious problems and issues. Efforts have been made to form in each College a nucleus of students willing to meet occasionally for this purpose. In this way students have caught a partial vision of the possibilities of developing a religious program within the College walls.

Boys' Club work and also Yale Hope Mission gospel and educational activities have proceeded this year as in the past. Bill Campbell headed the work at the Boys' Club, while Jim Fullman directed the activities of undergraduates at the Yale Hope Mission. This type of pursuit for the benefit of the indigent men and boys in the city was balanced by a program intended to administer to the needs of the Yale students, a program including discussion groups and deputations to colleges and churches, as well as to conferences and conventions. Whether deputations sent to Smith, Vassar, and Mount Holyoke were intended to edify and convert the girls or instil a little religion in the boys it is hard to say—we can simply observe that such deputations took place. The crowning achievement of the year as regards conferences and the like was the Quadrennial Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement, which occurred in Indianapolis during the Christmas vacation. Such outstanding Christian leaders as William Temple, Archbishop of York, and Kagawa of Japan delivered platform addresses at this convention which lasted for nearly a week. Only those who went in the bus specially chartered for Yale, Wellesley, Smith, Vassar, etc., can have any inkling of what this convention did for the Yale students who attended it. The Freshmen who were included in our number have since their return bravely and boldly thrown down the gauntlet and defied any one to prevent them from converting Connecticut College. Power to them!

Taskmaster.

Supplementing the work of Dwight Hall have been the activities of the religious counselors for the Catholic, Episcopal, and Jewish students. Under the guidance of Father Riggs the Catholic Club has continued to meet the needs of the Catholic student. Dick Moore was president of the Catholic Club this year, Peter Grace, vice-president, Allan Ryan, treasurer, and Paul Krug, secretary. For those interested, instruction groups met throughout the year at the home of Father Riggs. Retreat services were held during Lent and several Corporate Communion services enabled those of Catholic faith to worship according to the custom of their Church. The Corporate Communion held on December 8 was followed by a breakfast at which Professor Tinker spoke.

The Episcopal students found their religious satisfactions in the Berkeley Association under the leadership of Grant Noble. Twice a week Holy Communion services were held in Dwight Memorial Chapel and three large Corporate Communion services took place during the year. For the past four years the Berkeley Association has conducted services and taught Sunday school in St. Paul's Mission Church, Westbrook. Through it students have also done extensive work in the Episcopal churches in New Haven, helping with Sunday school classes and boys' clubs. Grant has opened up his home to students who have gathered on Sunday evenings for fellowship or to listen to clergymen discuss their convictions. During the winter he conducted weekly study groups, rounded off in the spring by a retreat lasting three days. At home on the football field as well as in the chapel, Grant has been able to meet students at their own level.

In the fall term of our Sophomore year a Jewish counselorship was established on the campus for the purpose of providing the Jewish students with leadership in matters pertaining to their faith. That year Dr. Isaac Rabinowitz helped in this capacity, Junior year, Mr. Irving Goleman, and Senior year, Rabbi Maurice L. Zigmond. The contact of these men with students has been largely on a personal and individual basis, a special effort having been made to acquaint Freshmen with the facilities and opportunities available along religious and cultural lines. As a feature of this year's activities the present incumbent has run a series of lectures. Dean Mendell inaugurated the series with a talk on "The Purpose of the Yale College Education." A lems of Jewish interest. The first chairman of this organization, as well as the first chairman of the Jewish Club on its inception, was Sam Weintraub, '36 S.

Through these years there has been a growing feeling among the various religious activities of a common function and unity of purpose in their work at Yale. And so Dwight Hall and the religious counselors have united to form an Interfaith Group which for the past two years has met nearly every month with representative students of each denomination. With the underlying theory that knowledge is a prerequisite to understanding and appreciation, the group devoted itself during the current year to a consideration of the beliefs and customs of the various religious faiths represented. It is safe to predict that there will be still closer bonds of this sort in the future.

THE COLLEGE PLAN

AS the first class to spend the allotted three years within the lavish portals of the College Plan, it is fitting that we make some tribute to the new system. Seeking not to spread propaganda, but to present a survey, this article is intended to show the undergraduate acceptance of the new order. The College Plan is an integral part of the Yale pattern. It is here to stay not in a subordinate position, but in one of the greatest importance, bound in with the intellectual pursuits and extra-curricular activities which are Yale.

Returning to New Haven today, the nervous alumnus will discover nothing to worry him, but much at which to marvel. To parody a famous phrase, the new Yale which our Class leaves has forgotten nothing and learned much.

The big blue teams still make creditable scores, the "tables down at Mory's" still echo the old songs, the News abuses its heelers, the Glee Club still "always sings in tails, sir," Tap Day tops off success stories, and the fraternities which decided to offer more than a robe, a bar, and a mortgage still survive. More than this, to be in a College is to do the "right thing," and the "right thing" still rules the lives of the greater part of undergraduate Yale. The much feared innovations in the social system and some imitations borrowed from abroad were inevitable and necessary to pull out deeply rooted defects. Nevertheless, traditions, such as those mentioned above, were recognized and encouraged for their value, not only in holding together the diverse departments of the University, in binding scattered alumni, but also for impressing public opinion. Tradition is strongly linked with sentiment, and sentiment is responsible for most beneficial gestures towards the University.

As transitional participants, the Class of '36 may well review the changes in outlook towards the College Plan since its inception. When the gentlemen of '36 appeared upon the New Haven scene the College System row was at its hottest. The new plan was termed a plot to ruin the fraternities, to level society, and a radical departure from the traditions of Yale. Its services as a target for wisecracks were such that it kept the Record in copy during a bad year. In confusion, we harkened to the campus great, but, admiring the impressive buildings, decided for ourselves. When our time came, the Colleges could show a waiting list. The greatest resistance to the College Plan, as was perfectly natural, came from the fraternity brotherhood, and as mystic Greek recognition was made of our political and social standing, a tug of loyalties developed. True enough, about May of Freshman year, some of our leading lights had mysteriously begun to condemn the College Plan, but as a whole 1936 was very sparing in its criticism. The spirit which caused some upperclassmen to refuse to eat even the minimum number of pre-paid meals in their College was not general. By Junior year, indeed, we were never conscious that there had been any other system at Yale, and in Senior year, many wonder how the Mother of Men ever existed without the Colleges.

The favor in which our Class holds the College Plan is due, not to a blind devotion to corporate decrees, but to rational observation. The sponsors of the plan had something valuable to offer Yale men, and they offered it in a gentlemanly manner. Beautiful lounges, well-stocked libraries, and twenty-one palatable meals for $8.50 were more convincing than any brass band could have been. The undergraduate was given a free hand and, self-convinced, was all the more sure that things were as they should be. These same convincing architectural comforts have been the object of much censure by those raised in the manly school of wash basins and cold water. The "silk-lined kennels" were certain to make sissies out of every man allowed to benefit by their dandified luxury. This attitude is not now prevalent and few grudge any student the right to learn to appreciate and enjoy good taste, if only for a brief three years. Of course, the squire's mansion back home will not appear quite as awe-inspiring, but perhaps that may be just as well.

The superficial attractions noted above, however, are little more than a "front"; the intrinsic values lie deeper. Without doubt, the greatest service wrought by the College Plan so far has been the student-faculty contacts. In the huge structure of the University, faculty and students were drawing apart much as industrial officials had drawn away from labor during the development of the great corporations in the business world. Faculty members were "queer ducks" whom one just didn't know. The Colleges have humanized the professor for the student and the benefit has been mutual. There is now no excuse for the existence of the crustacean recluse. Around a dining hall table, the lecturer becomes the raconteur. Fawning wanes as the personal approach increases. The sometimes smart-alec arguments of the classroom become the interesting discussions of the dinner table. Reserve gives way to informality, and with informality comes understanding.

Three years of experience show the Master of each College still occupying the key position. Though the policy of entertainment differs from College to College, any student who will make even a gesture of interest towards his College Master is richly rewarded. Each Master's house is a world apart—a home, not a reception hall. In the midst of the variant humdrum and nerve-racking undergraduate careers, these afford a haven. A quiet tea, fine furnishings, good taste, and a feminine touch, though only furtively admired by the "sports," have an appeal and a restful quality. The delightful contrast afforded by street and quadrangle, long cited by Billy Phelps as an apology for the city about us, is no more effective than the change from quadrangle to home.

The change in the relationship between the student members of a College and its Master and Fellows seems to be reflected throughout other phases of University life. As professorial recognition shifts its basis from an alphabetical seating list to the personal, and student knowledge of the professor becomes more than the catalogue cipher of "A.P.63 31N.S.H.," ancient walls of prejudice tumble down and the justification of the College Plan is complete in itself.

College life, however, does not revolve entirely around a spectacular array of dining room tables. Great actual benefits have accrued to self-supporting students. The generosity of Mr. Edward L. Harkness has made available the so-called Bursary funds, allocated proportionately, which enable an average of fifty students in each College to earn part of their board or more. With the realization that the most congenial meetings of the day occur at meal-times, came the determination that there should be no student waiters within the Colleges. The funds were to be no dole, but awards for useful work within the individual Colleges and throughout the larger sphere of the University. Within the Colleges, Bursary students serve as aides-de-camp to the Master and Fellows, interview new Bursary applicants, organize and care for the library, and arrange the hours of work and payment of all the Bursary students attached to the College. Within the general University structure, Bursary students are performing valuable work—in the Gymnasium, the Library, the Medical School, the Graduate School, and all the departments from art to zoology. Cataloguing, surveys, and research work for which there have been no direct appropriations are thus being carried out by the aid of these funds, while at the same time excellent training is being given the students. Waiting on the table was honest work, but not particularly inspiring; those working their way today have doubled both their value to the University and the scope of their education.

Davenport's Tuttle.

available eating clubs and smoke shops were at best unattractive, and the cheerless local hotel lobbies dreary places in which to entertain guests. The College Plan has not only corrected this unfortunate situation, but has added to this group more self-respect and an increased pride in Yale. The College provides a basis for loyalty more personal than a straggling University. "My College" has a wonderful ring to it. Possession, despite all political panaceas, is still the basis for loyalty and interest. The interest of the administration is reciprocated, and future loyal alumni are being developed from the once large group which returned disinterest with disinterest, regarding the University solely as a means and contributing nothing to the furtherance of its aims either during or after college.

There is another element within the University just as important as the two mentioned above and which overlaps, in part, the scholarship group. This is made up of the fraternity men, organization presidents, captains, and managers, and the otherwise socially prominent. For them the status quo was most satisfactory, and fear of the great unknown had caused consternation. This section of the University has lost nothing, however. Ability is recognized today as it was ten years ago, and the leadership of the so-called "campus big shots" has changed but little. The work is still being done by a handful of men, and the change is in the encouraging absence of awe among the other members of the community. The fraternities are still with us where congenial souls may gather in the seclusion no one grudges; entries may still be packed; and "Comrade" has not yet become the conventional greeting. Within the College, as within any community, men of similar tastes can and do band together. Gradually, however, the cleavages are narrowing as the former ruling caste realizes the opportunities which participation in the life of their College brings. No longer is "splendid isolation" the order of the day. Above all, the men whose lives and education have been more or less sheltered are taught to get along with all types of people. Adjustments must be made within the Colleges as within the factory, the court room, or on Wall Street.

The conversion of this last group to the College Plan has been furthered by general College activities which appeal to all types. The athletic program should be especially noted in this respect as hundreds of boys whom the highly specialized Varsity sports discouraged now play on their College teams. It is estimated that the same twenty-five per cent of the members of the University take part in Varsity athletics, fifty per cent take part in College athletics, and in the ranks of this non-varsity group there has been an increase of four to one over the number who once went out for the class teams. Indeed it is the fun of playing for their College which brings the boys out, not just a craving for sport page fame. There has also been an increase in the different sports in which individuals compete during the year, there being many three and four "College letter" men. "Athletics for all" is an actuality when more than one hundred men represent their College in some sport.

In non-athletic fields the catalogue of College activities is so lengthy that a detailed account is out of the question. Colleges have glee clubs, political clubs, and round table groups which meet to discuss chemistry, medicine, painting, music, and foreign affairs. A Gilbert and Sullivan club and a German club flourish in one College; a group of madrigal singers in another—the variety is as wide as the list is long. These are of more importance than mere outlets; they demonstrate the spontaneity existent on the campus today. The movements forced upon the students from above have received least support. Student interest inaugurates and maintains the College "activities"—though this connotation is unfortunate. Students are thinking constructively and the results are most satisfactory.

One thing remains to be done to round out the College System—the inclusion of all Sophomores within a College. The situation is not bad today, only one hundred and eighty-seven of that Class being on the outside. It is interesting to note that as the Sophomores have been moved into the Colleges, enough rooms on the Old Campus have been available to house nearly the whole Freshman Class. Not only has this put an end to the geographical isolation and separation of the Class in scattered rooming houses, but it early inculcates in them a sense of the Yale tradition. The Old Campus, dozing peacefully beneath its storied elms within the circle of its time-worn buildings is the kindly grandmother from whom the Freshmen will bring into the different Colleges the old traditions and the wide friendships which bind the University family.

Mention, appreciative mention, should be made of two organizations working quietly, patiently, from above. Perhaps the most difficult, certainly the most thankless, task in connection with the administration of the College Plan falls to the lot of the Committee on Allocations, who have not only to undertake the ostensibly mechanical job of locating the greatest number to their maximum satisfaction, but who have also to think through several fundamental problems, as they assign men to the various Colleges. Should it be the aim to place as many as possible in the College of their first choice, with the inevitable result that some Colleges will within a few years be heavily oversubscribed and the others practically uninhabited; or would it be better to risk a certain amount of dissatisfaction, in trying to spread the "talent" equally? Is it wise to let the various Colleges corner the market on men studying certain courses? Should one College be full of pre-medical students, or another, because it happens to be near old Shefftown, be packed with men of scientific bent? Is it wise to let a tradition of population give one College a defined personality, say social or political or intellectual; or should College character be kept down in the interests of even distribution and universal cosmopolitanism and democracy? The Allocations Committee has received much more criticism, suggestion, and abuse than thanks for its efforts to answer these questions squarely.

Trumbull's Bayne-Jones.

And the other group which should be given more than the passing notice our space permits is the Council of Masters, the committee under whose consideration pass matters ranging all the way from the most picayune cases of discipline to the most colossal matters of policy. Made up of those individuals who lend, to an amazing extent, richness and deepness to the College experience, they become, as a corporate body, an increasingly powerful group in the scope of their influence over undergraduate life.

The success of the College Plan is assured, its future bright. As we leave, may we be excused for looking upon it with a touch of paternal pride as in some measure the result of our efforts.

CLASS POEM

As delivered on Class Day by Hugh Chisholm.

*Morning in spring
No captive thing
To trap and lock away;
A moment here
As profiteer
And then—a yesterday.
Memory of bell
And elm will tell
More truly than a rhyme
How sharp the bliss
And hurt of this
Our honeysuckle time.*

It has come, the dream we dreamed and were loth to see,
The dream we dared and were half-aghast at the daring:
The tower trembles for the bell's new tone
And the air about us aches for the brief, sweet sharing.

Up the streets the eyes implore to remember this,
Remember sounds, to remember names and the laughter;
And hearts, careening, hover over joys
Of the careless years and murmur, remember after.

They are over now, and proof of their passing ripe
In sudden flowering meanings—that which has been
And that which is are now no longer one,
For the known has come alive that was dead unseen.

What enchantment gilds the late spring of our lives
That old retainers should wear new livery for us,
Familiar scenes become italicized,
The forgotten song at evening swell to a chorus?

We cannot wait here,
It is plain we cannot wait.
Too late, lesson of bell
Unbearable, too late.
The lost is not found, the sun-
Drowned land is down the line;
Thither no traveller returns
And no sign
Accompanies to cry
The golden noon through the dark.
O hark, ye voyagers
Caught at the junction, hark
To what the leaves of the elm
Would tell us and the bell,
Our first lesson in The irrevocable.

O sun-drowned, gold sun-lost and rejoicing journey
Through childhood when to live alone achieves Importance, when the orchard white with blossom,
The roadway white with snow, or a blackbird calling,
Or beat of our hearts in the limitless dark of evening,
Or cool brush of lips on our forehead, is all,
Is all we know and all we need to know
Till our beautiful simplicity sees eclipse.

Eclipse we have witnessed, we that knew only the sun
Before the pale distraction of the moon
Attacked our sanity with lunatic
Multiple mortgages of joy and pain.
Across the live sun of our innocence
Slow shadow of lunar death, world sophistry,
Erased the young hope with the old despair.

We have circled the silvery, moonlit monolith
Of learning, of a thousand shattered ends
Of thought, a thousand stale butt-ends of reason
Forged into single column and set on high,
Memorial to Man and our heritage.
And we were sick, and our flesh crawled, physically
Sick at the crucifixion of our dreams.

What pale land saw we under light of moon?
 O heaven-hell of hopes brought forth too soon:
 Religion rotting languid in the sea
 Of static boredom; and morality,
 Become capricious, playing the coquette;
 Beauty enslaved and harnessed to abet
 The sale of patent medicines and soap;
 Freedom a fraud and peace a pious hope.
 Man had come far, indeed he had come far,
 And now could tell his distance from a star,
 Or gauge a pebble's age, or ride the air
 Cyclonically at rest; and yet the glare
 Of knowledge blinded him more than the dark
 Dark Ages of his history—the lark
 No longer could inoculate with song
 Those bred to false economy of wrong.

What is there to do
 O what to do
 Sun-inundated travellers?
 Shall we bay in tune
 Wail at the moon
 Or join the frenzied revellers?

Craven to retrace
 Prodigal space
 Where Youth possessed the sunlight:
 Maudlin to fling quips
 Bate the eclipse
 Go mad and drown in moonlight.

Which shall be our lot?
 Stench of old rot
 Anæsthetized our fathers,
 Straining but to feel—
 Satin or steel—
 And chasing after feathers.

Estuaries spill
 Over our sill
 Both sun and moonlight curses:
 O maneuver, merge,
 Generate urge
 Of federated forces.

O my friends, the sun burns strong in our hearts today,
Beneath the mist of despair our dreams were unbroken:
Once more we intercept the song of faith
And instinctively the bell becomes beauty's token.

But this sun will burn our vision to empty light,
Refine our dreams till the ore of earth has been lost:
And staring at the moon will turn our minds
From the large reality to the market cost.

We have sprung from men struck blind by the blazing sun,
Have crossed the desert of parched ideals with the creeping,
The ominous, moon-touched rationalizers, sly
In the art of self-deception and easy weeping.

We have heard their tales of reason, and every tale
Of faith our fathers have told we heard and remember:
O let us keep them both that we may know
How to tend the fire as well as rekindle the ember.

*Morning in spring
No captive thing
To trap and lock away;
A moment here
As profiteer,
And then—a yesterday.
Memory of bell
And elm will tell
More truly than a rhyme
How sharp the bliss
And hurt of this
Our honeysuckle time.*

IVY ODE

As delivered on Class Day by John W. Warrington.

Quantum senectus non valeat bonis
Nocere, testis sit mihi quae vicens
Per lustra quadraginta septem
Lampada sustinuit Minervae

Voltu sereno, sive per improbas
Fortuna ridens illecebras dedit
Occasiones quâs lubido est
Insidias struere eruditis,

Seu forte fastus impatiens sui,
Severa nutrix, edocet inscios
Quam saepe virtus lactiore
Pauperibus facie renidet.

Semperque crescas, et sapientiae
Intentiores nos quoque vindices
Reddas, precamur, mente pura
Hanc hederam tibi consecrantes.

THE ALUMNI UNIVERSITY FUND

IN June, 1890, the Corporation established the "Alumni University Fund" in response to resolutions of the New York alumni, and at Commencement of that year there was organized an association "to be known as 'The Alumni University Fund Association,' to be managed by nine Directors, alumni of Yale, appointed by the President of the University."

The Yale Alumni Fund grew out of the strong desire of every Yale man to serve. In the words of the founders, "A widespread sentiment has existed for some time among Yale graduates in favor of some systematic endeavor to increase the resources of the University." Until the Alumni Fund was organized, there was no practical way for the great mass of graduates to help the University, to give tangible evidence of their loyalty, and to have a share in making possible for others the benefits which they themselves enjoyed.

The Alumni Fund is the channel through which every Yale man, according to his means, can express his devotion to Yale. The Fund has had a slow but steady growth and is now one of the principal sources of unrestricted income to the University. It is by far the source of income most acceptable to the University, as it represents the affection and self-denial of her own sons.

For the first year of its existence, ending June, 1891, the Association reported 385 members and total "cash received into the Fund, $11,015.08." Compare with this the report for the year ending June 30, 1935, showing 7,355 contributions and total gross receipts of $269,869.96 (including interest on the Principal Fund).

The receipts from the inauguration of the Fund, in 1890, to June 30, 1935, reached the grand total of $11,137,620.64, of which $4,494,443.21 remains as Principal Fund and $6,218,391.08 has been given the University for income for general current expenses.

For the Class of 1936 there will be one agent appointed for each College, thereby gaining the same advantages from organization through smaller units which the College Plan has made available for so many other purposes.

In no way can a Yale man more easily demonstrate his loyalty to Yale than by joining the Alumni Fund Association, for any contribution, however small, makes you eligible.
